MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE proposed march of the 3rd Dragoon Guards from Muttra to the camp of instruction at Meerut, which was postponed owing to the outbreak of anthrax, is likely to be carried out after all.

THE appointment of Major E. C. Elliston, Bengal Staff Corps, to the Bombay Commissariat, is not likely to be confirmed. That officer will be appointed to the Bengal Commissariat Department, a.d Lieutenant H. S. Hazelgrove, now in the Bengal Commissariat, a Bombay officer, will be transferred to the Bombay Commissariat Department. It is stated that some objection was raised at home to Major Elliston's appointment in Bombay.

THE troopship Serapis was to leave Bombay for England on the 21st February.

CAPTAIN W. LAMBERT, 3rd Punjab Cavalry, has passed the examination for the Judge Advocate General's Department.

THE undermentioned military posts in Upper Burma have been handed over to the charge of the military police and the troops withdrawn:—Hlinedet, Nabekyi, Yawthit, Magyiok and Htartabin.

A special grant of Rs. 6,000 has been made by the Govern ment of India for assaults-at-arms to be held in the several commands in the Bengal Presidency during the year 1888-89.

It has been decided that a probationer for the Staff Corps who ceases to continue as such for reasons which are dee ned be insufficient or unsatisfactory, and whose battalion has eft India, will be granted only a non-regulation passage by a troopship

THE Government of India have ruled that regimental warrant officers shall receive messing as second-class passengers when proceeding on duty in Indian Government troopships or hired transports between ports in India or beyond the limits of

THE Commander-in-Chief in India has directed the publication of a book of "Regulations for the Royal Artillery in India," which will be issued to officers concerned from the office of the Inspector-General of Artillery in India. These regulations are intended to supersede all Royal Artillery in India circulars and regimental orders (except those modifying individual promotions appointments transfers portions or India circulars and regimental orders (except those modifying individual promotions, appointments, transfers, postings, exchanges, retirements, &c., of officers, and awards of prizes for skill at arms) hitherto in force. They will be applicable to the Royal Artillery in the three presidencies, and are to be quoted in official correspondence. Additions, and corrections will be published when necessary in Royal Artillery in India regimental orders, and copies in possession will be amended accordingly. Regimental orders of the Royal Artillery in India need not be retained in possession after three years from date of issue of issue.

THE Gazette notifies the appointment of Brigadier-General Luck to be Inspector-General of Cavalry in India, with effect from October last. An Army Circular at the same time announces that the Governor-General has sanctioned this appointment which carries with it the consolidated salary of Rs. 2,200, and is tenable for five years. During the cold season the Inspector-General will be allowed the services of a Brigade-Major on a staff salary of Rs. 400.

THE CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA LONDON AND CHINA

An extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders of the above cank was held in the board room at 66, Old Broad-street, E.C., on the 21st inst. Mr. Alex. Fraser occupied the chair. The object of the 21st inst. Mr. Alex. Fraser occupied the chair. The object of the meeting was to confirm two resolutions passed at an extraordinary meeting held after the usual half-yearly on Oct. 18 last. The secretary read the advertisement calling the meeting and the two resolutions, which were as follows:—(1.) That the directors be authorised to apply for and accept any renewed or supplementary charter, or any extension of time for which the existing charter of the Corporation is granted. (2.) To alter the provision of the deed of settlements as to the notice required for calling general meetings, so that the notice be not less than fourteen days instead of four months, as heretofore. The Chairman said it was unnecessary to say anything in reference to the motions, as the shareholders had had plenty of time to canvass them since the last meeting. He would therefore move that they be confirmed, and would call for a seconder. Mr. E. J. Daviels seconded, and the motions were carried unanimously.

AT a meeting of the Asiatic Society, held on Feb. 20, Sir Frederick Goldsmid, K.C.B., in the chair, Messrs. Ralph Heap and J. H. Master were elected resident members; Messrs. Babu D. Mukahafa, W. E. Coleman, Edouard Drouin, and A. Rouffignac non-resident. Mr. Bendall exhibited some leaves of an interesting palm leaf MS. of the Lamkāvatāra, and pointed out the importance of such MSS from Nepal. Mr. Reginald Stuart Poole gave an address on "The Political Relations of Shah Ismail I. and Tahmasp I., the Safavis with Balur and Humayún, Emperors of Dehli," on which valuable light had lately been thrown by new coins acquired at the British Museum Mr. Howorth confirmed Mr. Poole's views on the authority a parallel notices from the Mongolian side, and a discussion followed.

ALL who have been in Indian stations or cantonments during the hot weather know how to appreciate the luxury of ice. To such a new invention called the "Ameka Ice-Machine and Refrigerator," will come as a bon and a blessing. It is an invention which does away with all complicated It is an invention which does away with all complicated machinery, the patentee using only a harmless salt, and by a most simple process bringing water to the freezing point in three minutes. For meat or other articles of diet a dry cold air is secured instead of the damp air of the common ice-machines. A domestic machine will, in addition to preserving perishables that may be placed within it, make ten pounds of ice per hour. The cost of the simple chemicals required for the new machine, as compared with the ice in the old one, is infinitesimal. The salts used, for example, are furnished with each machine in quantity sufficient to last one year and with each machine in quantity sufficient to last one year, and can be purchased from the company, or its agents, afterwards at a small cost. The machines can be seen at work at 100c, Queen Victoria-street, where our Anglo-Indian friends can also gain every information concerning this very promising in vention.

THE retirement of Lieut.-General Wood will advance Major-General H. H. James, also of the Bombay Army, to the higher rank, and he will get his step after serving three years as a general officer. His promotion will compel him to vacate the post he now holds as brigadier-general on the staff of the Bombay Army. General James has served 43 years in the Indian Army. He was in the Abyssinian expedition, and in the late Afghan war commanded a brigade of Infantry of the field force under Sir R. Phayre.

At the National Union Club, on Wednesday night, several gentlemen about to join the Methuen Settlement were entertained at dinner. Lord Elibank presided, and among those present were Lord Pollington, Admiral Sir E. Inglefield, Admiral Derriman, General Palk, Colonel Hughes-Hallett, M.P., Colonel Payne, Colonel Terry, and Colonel Graham. Apologies for absence were received from the Marquis of Carmarthen, Sir George Baden-Powell, M.P., and Colonel Methuen, from whom a letter was read, replete with sound counsel to the intending emigrants. The Chairman, in proposing "Success to the Methuen Settlement," said he hoped the ing "Success to the Methuen Settlement," said he hoped the time was not far distant when the whole of South Africa would be under British rule, but before that could happen it would be under British rule, but before that could happen it would be necessary that larger numbers of our fellow-countrymen should go out there as settlers. He hoped that the Methuen Settlement will prove but the pioneer of other settlements, and that large tracts of country would thus be developed. Colonel Terry, in response, gave an interesting account of the district to which the settlers were going, and expressed his satisfaction at the appointment of Colonel Graham as agent in this country for the settlement. Lord Elibank, in giving "Prosperity to the National Union Club," expressed his gratitude for the opportunity that had been afforded to wish God-speed to those who were about to join the settlement. Dr. Steadman, who was a trooper under Colonel Methuen, spoke of the opportunities offered in Bechuanaland to men who were unable to realise a competency in the overcrowded land of their birth. Dr. Norman M'Leod in the overcrowded land of their birth. Dr. Norman M'Leod gave "The Pioneers," who, as soldiers or sailors, were usually "out and out" men. He knew of no greater privilege than to be a pioneer, especially in the land of the future—Africa.

"VOICE OF INDIA.

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthly (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The folice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian poeple.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally doelle and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to cournists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

ESTABLISHED 1844. OPINIONS

The Calcutta Review for Oct-ber reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number mere than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public savour.—Ltatesman, October 1886.

... The best service which I over randered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athensoum Club, June 23

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sen e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, it the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims,—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout ts career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India. — Westmineter

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE ESTABLISHED 1933

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazetto" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Sorvices. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

ing weekly on tegimental badges and History. Intertations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue centains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the FrenSh, Russian, and other Government, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, specially of the German, Froach, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng'and regarding Military affairs.

DIAMANTÉ

The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS originally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Messrs, THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prizo Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand moude and silte of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 13-Carat Gold by the best Diamond Setters, exactly in the manner of the finestBrazilian Diamonds.

THE Viceregal Council passed the Bill for levying duty on Petroleum on Feb. 10.

It is understood to be the intention of Government to take up the question of the exemption of salt on the sea from duty when the salt-tax is enhanced, with a view to the repeal of the section of the Sea Customs Act which operates so disastrously against the general public interests.

THE Commissioner of the Abkari and Salt Department at Goa has notified an increase in the salt-tax, in conformity with the resolution of the British Government, from Jan. 19 last.

LORD DUFFERIN, according to present arrangement, will leave India about the middle of November. Sir Mackenzie Wallace will return with him to England, and resume a literary career.

THE VICEROY will make a short stay at Rewah on his way towards Simla, bagging a tiger or two whilst there if possible. It would seem probable also that he may pay Lucknow a promised visit.

LADY ROBERTS presented new colours to the 16th (Lucknow Regiment) Bengal Infantry, at Agra on Feb. 14.

LORD and Lady Connemara have left Calcutta for Madras.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the N.W. Provinces has returned to Lucknow.

THE Public Works Minister will probably make a considerable tour towards the South, visiting, among other points, the field of operations of the Bengal-Nagpur Company.

PRINCE BERNARD OF SAXE-WEIMAR, accompanied by Baron Fuchs, M. Nordhoff and M. Van Lennop, has arrived at Agra on a visit.

THE HONOURABLE MR. BARBOUR does not now propose to return to India before July.

THE ever-increasing work of the Financial Secretary to Government having long been found too big a load for even the broadest shoulders to bear it is proposed to give him a deputy. The question of creating such a post is now under discussion at home.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT have attended a Brahman wedding at Bombay.

H.E. THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF PORTUGESE INDIA is at present on a visit to the Governor of Bombay.

LADY REAY'S fancy fair in aid of the Countess of Dufferin's fund realised Rs. 35,000.

COLONEL THOMASON, chief of the P.W.D. in Central India, has been attacked and bitten by a wolf near Indore. He was to proceed to Paris to consult Dr. Pasteur.

THE Bengal Government have taken up the pilots' grievances, and a Committee will shortly assemble to consider the question of the distribution of ships among the members of the Pilot Service. The President will be Mr.

Reynolds, Chairman of the Port Commissioners, and the members, Mr. Mackay, of the British India Steamship Company; Captain Stiffe, the Port Officer; Mr. Rayner, Senior Master Pilot; and Mr. Paine, Mate Pilot.

Consequent on Mr. McConaghey's appointment to the Inspector-Generalship of Police, Colonel Erskine, Commissioner of Sitapur, will succeed to the Commissionership of Lucknow, while Mr. Boys, Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow, acts temporarily as Commissioner of Sitapur until relieved by Mr. Adams.

Mr. H. E. M. James, Deputy Director of the Indian Post-Office, reverts shortly to a Collectorship in Bombay, to the Civil Service of which Presidency he belongs.

COLONEL E. H. H. COLLEN, Military Secretary to Government, is expected in Bombay from home. His return to his post will be the signal for the active consideration of a plan that has been matured for reorganising the working system of the Department.

It is understood that the appointments to the chief posts in Hyderabad, Rajputana, and Indore, to provide for impending retirements, will not be settled until the return to India of the Foreign Secretary.

THE 32nd Pioneers are now busy bridging and improving the road between Siliguri and the Teesta river in British territory.

According to present arrangements, the Viceroy and Lady Dufferin will not occupy the new Government House on their return to Simla. The place is not yet finished.

The publication of the report of the Public Service Commission still waits on the pleasure of the Secretary of State.

THE Supreme Government has just despatched a fine collection of Indian wares to the Glasgow Exhibition. Selections of economic products have lately been sent to Italy, Belgium, the Australian Colonies, and Tasmania.

COLONEL OLIVER ST. JOHN took charge of the Residency of Baroda on the 28th January. Colonel Berkeley, the retiring Resident, leaves for Europe by the next mail.

Mr. S. Jacob, on return from furlough, has been placed on special duty in the Finance Department, where work in connection with the Budget is very heavy just now.

LIEUT. NEWMARCH proceeds to Lus Beyla to assist at the enthronement of the new Jam.

THE Khyber Maliks, accompanied by Colonel Warburton, arrived at Quetta on the evening of the 6th February. They came by the Harnai route, and were much impressed by that wonderful railway. They were received in durbar next day. Colonel Warburton was the guest of Sir Robert and Lady Sandeman.

THE receipts from eleven sales of Bengal opium and ten months' pass duty at Bombay amount to Rs. 7,54,46,525, which is Rs. 25,61,825 less than the estimate. Of this deficiency Bengal shows Rs. 20,43,275, and Bombay Rs. 5,18,600.

Rs. 5,18,600.

The Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, after a tour which has occupied the best part of the cold weather, has arrived at Jubbulpore.

THE question of organising regular coolie emigration to Netherlands India has been lately under the consideration of Government, and it is probable a successful issue will be arrived at.

THE Jeypore Durbar intend sending to the permanent Economic Court at Calcutta a complete collection of the products of the State.

Mr. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM will return to Ind'a shortly to serve out the remainder of his term.

NOTES.

THE news by telegram from India published this morning seems to indicate that we are on the eve of another little war. We hope, however, that a Sikkim campaign may yet be avoided by diplomacy. Such campaigns—and we have had quite enough of them in India—bring neither glory to warriors or prestige to statesmen, but simply deficits to the Treasury.

It is also to be hoped that the unfortunate affair in the Chittagong Hill tracts, in which Lieut. Stewart and three of his men lost their lives, may not be interpreted as meaning that the trans-frontier tribes want to fight us. Of course, when an officer and his men are killed while quietly carrying out a survey in British territory, retribution of some kind must follow. The offenders must be brought to punishment. But this need not necessitate a military expedition. Allowing the necessity for the Lushai country being opened out both from the Chittagong and Burma direction, it would be wiser, as the Pioneer points out, to do this by marching troops from Burma in relief across to Chittagong, "thus showing our power from the rear, as it were, than to wait until raids by Chins into the Yaw country, or by Kukis into the Hill tracts, render expeditions a matter of necessity."

Or course military men like "expeditions." There is always a chance of a fight, and, therefore, of promotion or medals or honourable mention in despatches; but, as the Allahabad paper points out, such measures against savage tribes, except in the last extremity, only raise new difficulties. "The better plan," says that journal, "is to extend the area of our political influence quietly yet firmly, showing force sufficient to dissipate all idea of resistance on the part of tribal chiefs, but leaving them at the same time free from needless interference, so long as they keep their own territories in good order."

To speed the parting and welcome the coming Viceroy is at present the rôle of the Press in India. The "speeding," so far as the Native Press is concerned, appears rather uncomplimentary, considering how much Lord Dufferin has striven to make himself popular with the Bengalis. Here is what the Indian Mirror, which, it is believed, gives the note to the rest of the Native Press, says:—"Lord Dufferin's resignation has all the air of a Cabinet trick. It is something to be the hero of a mysterious disappearance. It is a sad comment to make on the retirement of a Viceroy that it is not followed by general regret. It is, no doubt, a great pity that we should at any time have men for Viceroys with no more than society recommendation. The case of Lord Lytton as well as that of the present Viceroy have sufficiently proved that a diplomatic training and brilliant social qualities are not the first recommendations of an Indian Viceroy. We are sorry that we cannot say anything in favour of Lord Dufferin, except that he has been generally inoffensive."

The Bengali, of course, follows suit:—"So far his Lordship's Viceroyalty has been marked by the vigour of his foreign policy, without, however, a single measure of domestic reform. Upper Burma has been annexed; the delimitation of the North-Western frontiers has been effected, whether upon a permanent basis or otherwise the future alone can disclose; and lastly, an army has been sent to Sikkim. The chief feature of the domestic policy of the Government has not been domestic reform, but a heavy addition to the income of taxation. The Incometax has been imposed; the Salt-tax has been raised, and a fresh duty has been levied upon petroleum. Lord Dufferin, when he assumed the roins of Government, declared that he would foster the seeds of Self-Government which had been planted by his predecessor. Nothing has been done in this direction."

All this, as the Times correspondent says in his telegram from Calcutta to-day, is owing to the impossibility of any Viceroy being able to fulfil the aspirations created in the Bengali bosom by Lord Ripon, whose failure as an administrator Lord Dufferin has now to bear the brunt of.

It is more pleasant to turn to the opinion expressed by the leading journal of the Punjab-an opinion which is shared by all the Anglo-Indian Press with but few exceptions. The Civil and Military Gazette says :- "Lord Dufferin's resignation is a disaster to India. Without depreciating the character or abilities of his successor, or assigning any special motive to Lord Dufferin's resolution at the present moment, no honest friend of India can learn without grief that the strong hands which have ruled India for the last three years will prematurely hand over the reins of power to another. Looking forward it was natural for the hopeful mind to picture rather a second period of his Excellency's rule—a rule of firmness tempered with courtesy, of preparation to meet external troubles, and moderation in dealing with internal movements-a rule which was a terror only to the Queen's enemies, and disappointed only those who had imagined vain things."

If the Maharaja Holkar thought that he was treated without honour in this country, he is apparently not being particularly respected in his own. It is stated in more than one of the Indian papers that unless he chooses to set his house in order, and live like a reasonable and reputable person, a crisis must ere long occur in the Indore State. It is said that he has quarrelled with all his relations and with his Minister, that he does no work whatever, and that he occupies his whole time as Childe Harold did before he went upon his pilgrimage, being

"Sore given to revelrie and ungodly glee, Few earthly things found favour in his sighte, Save concubines and carnal companie."

The Times correspondent telegraphs that Sir C. Bernard's appointment to a permanent post at the India Office has given much satisfaction to all classes in Burma, as it is felt to be of much importance to that Province that one so intimately acquainted with its growing requirements should be at headquarters. If this be the reason of the appointment, it is not that which commends itself to the Pall Mall Gazette, which journal a few days ago congratulated the Government in having given office to so thoroughgoing a Radical as Sir Charles Bernard!

The projectors of the Sind, Rajputana and Punjab line of railway having asked the Government of India to grant them a reconnaissance of the country proposed to be traversed, the Government consented, and Mr. Horace Bell, Chief Engineer of the Tirhoot State line, a very capable officer, had been selected to carry out the operation. But at the last moment it has been decided that, considering the nature of the ground to be gone over, the season is already too far advanced to begin. The reconnaissance will, however, probably be commenced at the close of the next rains.

The Future of India.—Under the auspices of the East India Association, a meeting of officers and gentlemen interested in the affairs of the British Empire in the East was held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday, Feb. 20—Sir William Chichele Plowden, K.C.S.I., M.P., presiding—for the purpose of conferring on the political and social future of the Indian peoples, and their relation to the Imperial Government. The principal address was given by Mr. Siva Ram, who dilated at length upon the advantages of the British connexion to the people of India. Every student of Indian history, he said, must be vividly impressed with the fact that almost all the Governors-General and Viceroys had been actuated by a desire to benefit the people entrusted to their care, but it was now the lawful ambition of the people that they should take a large share in their own government. The notion that India was unfitted for a democratic form of government was erroneous, for what might be called the Parliamentary system existed originally in Indian society, and had never been wholly lost in the village communities. In the course of the discussion which followed there was general agreement that the time was ripe for a considerable increase of the share of the Natives in the government of India, especially in local administration and in the Civil Service. The proceedings closed with the customary votes of thank.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 4. The Rajah of Sikkim remains contumacious, while the Tibetan troops refuse to retire from their fortified position. It has been found necessary, therefore, to cast aside the transparent veil of diplomatic concealment, and to convert the so-called military road-making expedition into a formally constituted Sikkim field force. A general order issued in the Military Department states that the Governor-General in Council has ordered the despatch of a force for operations on the Sikkim-Tibet frontier as detailed below:—

Staff—Colonel Greham commonding: Centain Travers

Staff.—Colonel Graham commanding; Captain Travers, Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General.
Strength of Force.—Northern Division Royal Artillery, four guns; 2nd Battalion Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment, 200; 13th Bengal Infantry, 400; 32nd Bengal Infantry (Pioneers), 700.

A base depôt will be formed at Siliguri, or some other place conveniently near

A base depôt will be formed at Siliguri, or some other place conveniently near.

It is stated that Colonel Graham has received peremptory orders to avoid crossing the Tibetan frontier. The sole object of the expedition is to expel the Tibetan troops from Lingtu, if they shall still be there on March 15th. At the same time precautions will be adopted to guard all strategic points on the Sikkim frontier so as to prevent any attempt by the Tibetans to effect a successful diversion by raids or otherwise. The Government is very anxious to avoid, if possible, being forced to commence actual hostilities. We are now paying the inevitable penalty of our past vacillation and retrogressive policy. It will be very difficult to persuade the Rajah and the Tibetan authorities, in the face of their former experience, that this military demonstration is anything more than brutum fulmen, until they realise the stern fact that on this occasion, at all events, the Government is resolved to crush all disobedience and aggression by severe punitive measures.

As a last effort, however, to effect a peaceful solution of the

As a last effort, however, to effect a peaceful solution of the difficulty the Viceroy has gone to Darjeeling, accompanied by Mr. Ware Edgar, Chief Secretary of the Bengal Government, an experienced and sagacious frontier officer. Lord Dufferin will endeavour to make arrangements for a personal interview with the Rajah. If the negotiations then fail, the Rajah will probably be deposed, and hostilities will at once

At the last meeting of the Legislative Council the Bill for regulating the Indian reserve force was passed into law. General Chesney, in the course of his speech, said there was reason to believe that much more active progress would shortly be made in the formation of reserves, and that it was desirable that all men drafted into the reserves should be subject imme-that all men drafted into the reserves should be subject immediately to the conditions laid down.

A preliminary meeting will be held shortly to discuss the arrangements for the projected demonstration in honour of Lord Dufferin. It is definitely settled that the Viceroy will not return from Simla to Calcutta. Many of the Native newspapers continue to criticise in intemperate language the policy and public character of the Viceroy. It is a little difficult to understand the reason for this. Lord Dufferin is the perfection of courtesy to Natives as well as to Europeans; and, moreover, during the whole period of his term of office, has invariably adopted a policy of conciliation, both active and passive. This apparent unpopularity with the noisy clique of Bengalee agitators is largely due to the fact that it is impossible for any conscientious Viceroy to satisfy in any appreciable degree the aspirations created by the administration of Lord Ripon, which have been subjected to acute disappointment by the non-fulfilment of his promises. Lord Dufferin has now to bear the brunt of Lord Ripon's failure. Captain St. John Michell's exploring expedition into Burma

Captain St. John Michell's exploring expedition into Burma has returned to Assam, after a most successful march made in circumstances of great difficulty and privation. An excellent route is reported to exist to the Irrawaddy from the Brahmapootra, 400 miles long, fit for a railway or for a trunk road, sixteen hundred square miles of entirely unknown country were surveyed. At one time the party was in imminent danger of perishing by starvation, as the villagers refused to danger of perishing by starvation, as the vinagers refused to furnish supplies.

The members of the expedition entered Upper Burma on February 18. Another party had advanced from Burma in order to meet them, but had been forced to retire. They were beyond reach of news for two months. Human sacrifice prevails in all the hill villages. The party was constantly informed that it would be attacked by a force of Chins, under a Mussulman leader, 2,000 strong, but the Chins never appeared. An important meeting of the Unconvenanted Civil Service Association was held on Friday, relative to the injustice of paying retiring pensions with the depreciated rupee. The following resolution was passed:—

"In consideration of the fact that up to comparatively recent dates notices, issued under the authority of the Government, have represented the rupee as being about equal to two shillings, and in consideration of the actual serious depreciation of value, which has led to grievous loss, and even distress, to officers retiring to Europe, this meeting earnestly hopes that the Government will adopt such measures as will remove the painful uncertainty which at present exists as to the amount of all future incomes, by paying pensions in Europe and the colonies in sterling at a fixed rate of exchange; and this meeting is of opinion that the rate fixed should be that of two shillings to the rupee."

The Maharajah of Travancore is this week in Madras, visiting the places of interest in that city. Last night he was present at a garden-party given by the Nawab-Begum Saheba at Nawab Feroze-Husain's, at which the Governor and Lady Connemara attended. In the course of a short speech thanking their hostess, his Excellency extolled the present management of the Travancore States. This may be regarded as an official reply to the recent series of articles in a section of the Madras Press, in which gross charges of various kinds have been recklessly made against the Maharajah and the Dewan of Travancore. Travancore.

The Rajah of Jhind was installed by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces on Tuesday.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MARCH 3.

Rangoon, March 3.

Sir George White will remain in command of the troops in Upper Burma for another year. No separate field army will be maintained, but the constitution of the force will be little changed as regards either its discipline or its state of preparation for active service. This step has been found necessary owing to the fact that the pacification of the province has not progressed so rapidly as was anticipated. The Government of India has acted very judiciously in deciding not to reduce for the present the number of the troops in Upper Burma. The province is still in a critical condition. Although all the large bands of dacoits have been broken up, and the principal leaders slain, the country is still infested by small dacoit gangs. Any relaxation of the steady pressure against disorder which is now maintained would inevitably result in a renewal of disorder. As the disarmamen of the people is being carried out it is specially incumbent on the local Government to afford them full protection. General White knows Upper Burma thoroughly, and has shown marked ability during the period of his command, and his retention here for ing the period of his command, and his retention here for another year is warmly approved.

The condition and discipline of the large force of military

The condition and discipline of the large force of military police now in Upper Burma are attracting much attention. This body, numbering some 20,000 men, consists mainly of Punjabees. Their fighting qualities leave little to be desired, but for ordinary police duties they are almost useless. It is stated by the Rangoon Press that large numbers of these men have come to Burma allured by the prospect of looting the newly-conquered country, and their conduct in many cases would seem to support this view. The local journals contain many complaints of acts of violence committed by them not would seem to support this view. The local journals contain many complaints of acts of violence committed by them, not only in outlying districts, but in Rangoon. This want of discipline among the military police is mainly, if not entirely, due to inadequacy in the number of European officers attached to the force. It is urgently necessary that a large increase should be made in the number of European officers. If this be not done, the military police force will become a standing source of denger

The last official bulletin from Upper Burma shows no important changes. The body of Mr. Chill, the police inspector who was killed by dacoits, has been recovered. The police who were with him when he was killed were forced to retire, several of them being wounded. In an encounter with dacoits near Popa-hill Inspector Collins and a sergeant of military police were severely wounded. A party of Burmese police in the Yau district was recently attacked by dacoits, and the head-constable and another constable were severly wounded. The dacoits succeeded in carrying off some arms and ammunities. The dacoits succeeded in carrying off some arms and ammunition. Several small encounters between police and dacoits are reported in which the police were successful. Considerable numbers of firearms are being captured by the military and police. The flying columns from General Low's brigade have now been broken up, the operations possible only in the cold weather being now practically at an end.

Several prisoners have succeeded in escaping from the prison at Bhamo, including the man who recently attacked Colonel Little and severely wounded him. Colonel Little is now out of danger.

Sir C. Bernard's appointment to a permanent post at the India Office has given much satisfaction to all clases in Burma It is felt to be of much importance to the province that one so intimately acquainted with Burma and its growing requirements should be at headquarters. Even those most opposed to certain details of Sir C. Bernard's local policy while he was Chief Commissioner of Burma bear testimony to his anxious desire to advance the interests of the province and to promote the welfare of the people.

REGIMENTAL INSTITUTES. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

We hear on all sides that a very common Indian complaint—want of funds—threatens to paralyse at the very start the efforts of commanding officers to meet the views of the Commander-in-Chief with regard to the proposed Regimental Institutes. The idea has been so heartily taken up by all concerned, and more especially by those who will have all the trouble of carrying it out, that it does seem a pity that, in too many cases, the very mild suggestions put forward for the establishment of regimental institutes have been considered as of too expensive a character. It should not be forgotten that, from the first, it has been an understood thing that no expense on account of new buildings was on any account to be incurred, and that existing accommodation was in all cases to be utilised. In spite of this, it appears that even the most ordinary modifications and adaptations have in many cases been considered to cost more than the public purse should be called upon to disgorge; and, consequently, plans have had to be altered and estimates cut down to really very remarkable figures. To us it seems a short-sighted policy to insist upon a small present outlay in the comfortable hope that some day we shall be able to build unto our soldiers "a lordly pleasure-house," and remove them out of the makeshift building. The converted barrack will be found almost useless for any other purpose when the Regimental Institute occupies its appointed and proper building; and it is by no means unlikely that a future policy of parsimony may consider this sufficient reason for withholding altogether from the Institute any other accommodation than that which is now preparing. Commanding officers are chary of expatiating upon the grandeur of their regimental funds before inspecting officers; but we feel sure that they could find the money, were a certain yearly sum necessary for providing a suitable building for the comfort of the men. Government, like private individuals, has no objection to lend out its money at moderate, if certain, interes

THE CALCUTTA MINT. (Bombay Gazette.)

The Calcutta Defence Association takes up the cudgels for the Calcutta Mint, the abolition of which was recommended by the Finance Committee. Unluckily the Committee happened to visit that institution when it was unemployed, and the temptation to effect an economy by dispensing with it altogether proved very strong. The Defence Association considers, however, that the Mint should be kept on foot for possible emergencies, amongst which is enumerated the straits in which the currency of India would be placed if anything happened in time of war to the Mint in Bombay, a city which is calmly stated to be in a position involving great peril in any foreign war. It does not seem even to those of us who are anxious to secure the safety of this city with a casing of three inches of iron backed up with a little chunam and concealed beyond three or four feet of earth—as a local contemporary pondering on the military situation proposes—is |does not even to the most timid amongst us appear that either Bombay or its Mint is likely to be in as much peril as the Mint which it is gravely proposed to keep up permanently for occasional use, or even on the off-chance that it may be occasionally of use. The Calcutta Mint is not resorted to for the conversion of bullion into silver, for the excellent reason that the silver comes to Bombay as the nearest port to Europe, and it saves freight and time to have it coined here rather than send it to Bengal. In case of a foreign war which will directly interest India undoubtedly Bombay will be the base from which supplies will be sent to the seat of operations beyond the frontier, and consequently it is in this city that the most urgent need for the dannaro, dannaro, dannaro, that are the whole soul of war will be most felt and can be most easily supplied. If the conveniences of the populations from Oude to Burma, of which Calcutta is modestly stated to be the natural market, require silver coined in that city, there is no reason why they should not get it coined there. But the fact is, they don't get their bullion turned into rupees at that Mint, which only coins copper when it is not standing idle. The Bombay Mint is always employed in coining silver, and it has resources equal to all the demands that may be made upon it.

THE HEALTHINESS OF UPPER BURMA. (Mandalay Herald.)

We have two hot seasons, or rather one, tempered by the monsoon in the middle. From March to October the heat is awful; but it probably is most trying in April, May, and September. During the first two of these months the earth is red tember. During the first two of these months the earth is real hot, the river bed a Sahara of blazing sand, while the firmament is of molten brass; during the latter, with a heat, perhaps, of equal intensity, we are simply stewed. The fevers of Burma are notorious; there is the simple fever, produced by overwork and exposure to the sun, marked by high temperature, sudden collapse, and exhaustion; continuous and enteric fevers; last, but by no means least, the especial boast of Burma, making fever which experience one is able to held its own. a malarial fever, which, sparing no one, is able to hold its own for violence, malignity and persistence, with any rival. Infectious zymotic diseases are somewhat rare; and chest complaints, even in patients of marked pulmonary diathesis, unless handicapped by the results of climatic disease, seemscarce. Dysentery, diarrhea, internal inflammations and congestions, such as enlargement of the spleen, hepatitis, and kidney disease are as entargement of the spheer, neparitis, and rittiney disease and not uncommon, but are not peculiar to Northern Burma, and are frequently aggravated by the habits of the sufferers. Cholera is seasonal, and fever severe; but measles and small-pox are light in their visitations. Beri-beri, lupus, elephantiasis and leprosy, diseases hardly affecting the European population, though of occasional occurrence, may be considered infre leprosy, diseases hardly affecting the European population, though of occasional occurrence, may be considered infrequent; while the present writer has seen but little of the wens, goitres, scrofula necrosis, caries, or horrible skin diseases, rendering life in Oriental towns so hideous. Rheumatism is naturally prevalent, and frequently attacks Europeans, entailing the usual after symptoms. Ophthalmia is not common, except in cases of congenital disease. On the whole, we should be inclined to say that Upper Burma, though not peculiarly suitable for prolonged outdoor occupation, is not more unhealthy for the European than most Eastern countries, and is decidedly better than a good many. At the same time it will probably prove somewhat unhealthy for women, and fatal to children of pure European blood, who will have to spend a children of pure European blood, who will have to spend a large portion of the year in a sedentary manner, and whom no amount of ice and punkahs will shield from the exhausting effects of the intense and prolonged heat. Hill stations and seffects of the intense and prolonged heat. Hill stations and sanitaria may be hereafter discovered; but, hitherto the ingenuity of our medical men has mostly chosen cheerful fever dens, such as Bernardmyo, Kawlin, and Zebingaleh. Careful dens, such as Bernardmyo, Kawlin, and Zebingaleh. Careful and temperate living, proper housing, good water and freedom from worry, will do more to keep the exile in health than any amount of little bottles and pills of mystery. Pending the arrival of civilisations, we would advise readers not to sleep on verandahs or in the open during the hot weather; and though they may think the persistence with which the authorities insist on the use of cholera belts obstinate and pigheaded, the more they keep their middle portions warmly clad the better for them in the long run.

MILITARY PENSIONS DRAWN IN INDIA.

The Madras Mail has received the following letter from Deputy-Surgeon General Shortt:—

"I have observed recently several letters in the Mail about officers not being allowed to draw their pensions in England through agents, &c., and I submit an order which, if you will give it a place in the Mail, I shall be obliged, for, since the receipt of this order—for which I am obliged to the Pay Department, Madras—I have been drawing my pension in England through my agents ever since. I applied and petitioned the Secretary of State that the same privilege might be granted me as regards my annuity for the Medical Fund; but this was refused, which I regret, as I think the Government should afford every facility to retired officers to settle in this country; and had it not been for the state of my health I should have, perhaps, gone to England, and drawn my £400 annually instead of receiving in this country Rs. 3,500, as an equivalent to it.—

From the Government of India, Military Department, to the Most Honourable the Marquis of Hartington, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, dated Simla, 24th August, 1880. "With reference to our despatch of the 11th May, 1880, we have the honour to forward, for your Lordship's consideration, the papers noted in the margin relative to a claim preferred by Colonel J. Emerson, Retired List, Bengal Staff Corps, to draw his pension and annuity through his Agents in England, while he himself continues to reside in India. Under the Civil Rules, a pension stated in sterling may be drawn in England, even though the pensioner resides in India, while an annuitant from the Covenanted Civil Service may, if he resides in India, draw his annuity in England. We beg to inquire whether your Lordship in Council sees any objection to a similar concession being allowed in the case of officers retiring from military service."

Extract from Paragraph 7 of a military letter from the Most Honourable the Secretary of State for India, dated 16th De-cember, 1880:—"There is no rule which prevents officers who retire, and are resident in India, from drawing their pension through their agents in England; indeed, several officers have been allowed to do so. Moreover, it appears to me that by the conditions of his retirement Colonel J. Emerson is entitled to the privilege he claims. I conot consider it necessary to lay down any rule on the subject."

BENGAL.

AT the last meeting of the Calcutta Microscopical Society, Mr. Simmons read a paper on the mango weevil, a pest which is spreading rapidly in India, and to which attention is aptly directed at the moment when the mango is in blossom. Mr. Simmons has given much attention to the habits of the weevil since July last, and in his lecture he has gathered much useful information as to the geographical distribution of the creature, the extent of the damage done by it, and the observations of European and American entomologists on the ravages of the pest among plums, apples, quinces, &c. We believe this lecture is the first attempt to promote the systematic study of the weevil in India.

Babu Hurry Mohun Bose, Vice-President of the Howrah People's Association, writes to the Government of Bengal regarding the Howrah Bridge:—In the letter to the Port Commissioners it was stated that "when the bridge debt is paid off it will be obligatory on the Lieutenant-Governor to take steps to reduce the tolls to such a point that they will just suffice and no more to cover the annual charge for maintenance. The debt will be redeemed next year, and the Hughli Railway Bridge will then be open for traffic, and may have an important influence on the question. The Lieut.-Governor considers that that will be the proper time for considering which tolls should be abolished or reduced." The Committee believed that the bridge debt has been fully redeemed, that a sufficient reserve fund has been accumulated, and that the opening of the Jubilee Bridge has not, to any appreciable extent, affected the receipts of the Floating Bridge. They are, however, not in possession of any precise information on the point, and they, therefore, beg respectfully to pray that an inquiry into the matter may be made, and that the question as to the abolition of tolls, with effect from the commencement of the ensuing official year, may be presently taken into consideration by Government.

The morning and evening drills of the Calcutte Mounted

The morning and evening drills of the Calcutta Mounted Rifles, now under canvas at Ballygunge, take place on the adjoining maidan, and both men and horses show marked improvement from thus working regularly together. Captain Thomas makes an admirable commandant as ready with the suaviter in modo as with the fortiter in re. As an example of his capacity in the latter necessary element in a Commandant's character, a gallant trooper euphoniously known as "The Apostle," was the other day sentenced to an hour and a-half's sentry-go for a mistake in drill. It turned out subsequently that the mistake was made by the Lieutenant in charge of the Squadron. The Lieutenant afterwards explained this to his Squadron. The Lieutenant afterwards explained this to his Commanding Officer, but the gallant crooper had served out his punishment ere the explanation exonerated him. Another example of the discipline maintained in camp was the arrest of Captain C. Muir, Commandant of the Viceroy's Body-Guard, on Sunday night. Captain Muir was proceeding to his own lines and failed to answer the sentry's challenge when passing the Volunteers' Comp. However the sentry's challenge when passing the Volunteers' Camp. He was consequently arrested and marched off to the guard-room, whence he was afterwards released by the officer commanding. Captain Muir very handsomely acknowledged himself in the wrong, and accepted the inconvenience with the utmost good nature.

THE President of the Madras Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association has applied for a Government grant-in-aid of the schools at the Settlements of Whitefield and Sausmond, and the Resident of Mysore has been asked by Government whether there is any objection to these schools being placed under the inspection of the Madras Educational Department, with a view to the provisions of the Grant-in-aid Code being with a view to the provisions of the Grant-in-aid Code being made applicable to them.

THE case against Walter George Edwards, Inspector of Salt, Madras, on charges of criminal breach of trust in respect of two tons of salt, altering the public record and weighing out contraband salt, came to a close at the Madras Sessions by the jury finding the prisoner not guilty. Mr. Norton de-fended. There was another charge of a similar nature against Edwards. Mr. Justice Kernan having decided to try the case by a special jury, the trial was proceeded with. The prisoner by a special jury, the trial was proceeded with. by a special jury, the trial was proceeded with. The prisoner was arraigned on nine charges of breach of trust, altering the record and cheating. H.H. THE MAHARAJAH OF VIZIANAGRAM, K.C.L.E., has resigned his seat in the Legislative Council of the Governor of Madras, which he has occupied for two years, and has been appointed a member of the Viceregal Legislative Council. He will, therefore, for at least two years to come, spend the cool season at Calcutta, instead of, as heretofore, at Madras. He is ambitious of bringing about legislation to prevent a system of marriage among some of his co-religionists that is little else than a revolting traffic in girls of a tender age for the pecuniary benefit of their relations, who should also be their protectors. He proposed to introduce a Bill with that object in the Madras Courail but he had been discussed as the proposed to introduce a series of the madras of the Council, but has been dissuaded by several considerations. He will now be able to secure for his project the considerations. He will now be able to secure for his project the consideration of the highest Legislative assembly in the country. The British Government is so averse to interfering with the time-honoured manners, customs, and usages of the people of India, that his Highness may not be encouraged to proceed with his Bill, which has been drafted, but it is none the less creditable to him that he is desirous of using his influence on behalf of very many of his country women who seem to stand greatly in to him that he is desirous of using his innuence on benait of very many of his countrywomen who seem to stand greatly in need of it. The Maharajah has been a generous contributor to benevolent societies in Madras, and has earned by his courtesy, amiability, and tact the good-will of all classes of the community. His father had the honour of being a member of the Viceregal Legislative Council for a few years.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT A MILL.—A very sad accident occurred on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 11, at the Buckingham Mill, resulting in the death of Mr. Albert Hoyle, a machine fitter, who recently arrived from England to superintend the erection of some new machinery. Mr. Hoyle and Mr. Monk were watching the working of a new machine, which had been set going only a few hours previously, when some hard substance appears to have found its way through the cotton pipe into the machine. The knives appear to have first struck the substance and driven it, or some broken part of the bars, into the fan, which runs at the rate of about ten thousand revolutions a minute. The fan and bars split into pieces one of which, breaking through the cover, struck Mr. Hoyle a fearful blow on the forehead, breaking his skull. Other pieces forced their way through the iron roof of the building, and fell in the compound. Mr. Monk had a miraculous escape, for he was standing within a couple of feet of Mr. Hoyle at the time of the accident. The wound was of such a fearful nature as to preclude all hope of the sufferer's recovery, and he succumbed to his injuries without having recovered consciousness. The occurrence was the more tragic in that Mrs. Hoyle arrived to join her husband by the s.s. Nepaul, which anchored in the harbour only a few hours after Mr. Hoyle's death.

BOMBAY.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT made an inspection of the Bombay Volunteer Artillery in the compound of the Town Hall on the morning of Feb. 14. The corps, which was formed about a year ago and numbers 100 members, did not muster very well, showing on parade less than half that strength. The general salute having been given and acknowledged the men were inspected by his Royal Highness, who subsequently saw them working in sub-divisions on four 25-pr guns, which they manned with marked skill and rapidity. They were kept hand at work for fully half-an-hour when being formed up manned with marked skill and rapidity. They were kept hard at work for fully half-an-hour, when being formed up into line his Royal Highness addressed the men, complimenting them upon the progress they had made, and expressing the pleasure it had given him to see them.

On Monday evening, Feb. 3, his Excellency the Portuguese Governor-General, accompanied by Lord Reay, visited the Government Dockyard and Arsenal, and on Tuesday, accompanied by Lord and Lady Reay, went affoat to inspect the frigate Turquoise, which was then lying in the stream.

H.R.H. THE DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT, accompanied by Sir Howard and Lady Elphinstone and Captain Herber, aide-de-camp to H.E. the Commander-in-Chief, visited the High Court on Tuesday, Feb. 14, and sat on the bench of the Session Court from 4 to 5.30 P.M. during the trial of a murder case.

THERE was a conference at the Hyderabad Minister's Palace, Feb. 11, regarding the Raipur Railway. The Financial, Home and Revenue Secretaries and Mr. A. J. Dunlop took part in the conference. They were unanimously in favour of the proposed lines, and were resolved into a committee to advise as to what terms should be offered to the Government of India for permission to construct the branch line to Raipur instead of to Chanda.

THE Installation meeting of Lodge Rising Star of Western India was held on Feb. 23, when Worshipful Brother M. M. Bhownagee, C.I.E., was to be installed Worshipful Master for the ensuing year. His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught accepted an invitation to be present. The Lodge Rising Star is the oldest lodge in Bombay but one, having been founded nearly half a century ago by the late Dr. Burns and Mr. Manockjee Cursetjee.

ARRANGEMENTS are now being made for the distribution of the Jubilee medals presented by Mr. Shivlal Motilal. There are altogether twelve thousand of the medals, and are intended for presentation to the children who attended the Jubilee School Feast in Bombay. As a preliminary step Lieut.-Col. Portman has requested the managers, headmasters, and in spectors of the various schools to let him know the number of children of each school, so that the medals may be distributed in fair and equal proportions.

ANOTHER robbery of money and jewellery, to the extent of Rs. 6,000, has occurred in Benares. In this instance the thief confessed to having carried away the things while the occupant of the house was bathing in the Ganges during the time of the festival. The thief brought the money, gold coins, and bars, jewellery, &c., tied in a cloth, a distance of over four miles, and buried the parcel on the banks of the Burna Nadi, in the civil station, where it was unearthed by the police.

THERE was a sad falling-off in the yield of the wheat crop in the Punjab in 1886-87; the main causes being the destructive frosts of January and February, and the early hot winds which completed the ruin of much of the unirrigated wheat in certain districts. Deducting the acreage on which the crop was a failure, the total area under wheat is officially returned at 5,943,400 acres, compared with 6,970,600 acres last year, being a diminution of 15 per cent. The outturn is estimated at 27,238,305 cwts., showing a falling-off of no less than 25 per cent. Taking the average price at 17 seers per rupee, the wheat crop of the Punjab of 1887 was valued at Rs. 8,97,26,182 or, on a revised estimate of the outturn, at ten crores.

The scheme for the establishment of a bench of the High

The scheme for the establishment of a bench of the High Court in Oudh has been shelved, the reason officially assigned for what is practically its postponement sine die being that a special Act of Parliament would be required, and that the Home Government are not disposed to undertake such legislation at present. To those acquainted with the manifold objections to the proposal the above announcement will occasion no surprise. The necessity for strengthening the superior court in Oudh, to which attention was first called by the Privy Council, was generally admitted; but to effect this by weakening the High Court of the North-Wost—to have two weak Courts were one efficient Court exists—was not a notion that seriously commended itself to practical men. It may still be very possible to improve upon the present judiciary arrangements in Oudh, and to that end the attention of the local Government will ere long be earnestly directed.

BURMA.

The defalcation in the Irrawaddy Flotilla turns out to have been the result of careless management. Its cashier admitted having taken the money, when at first he stated he had paid it into the bank. He has been dismissed but not prosecuted. That Rs. 25,000 could have been missing for so long without its being detected shows what enormous sums the Flotilla have been making in the past two years, and is, perhaps, as good an excuse for levying the income-tax in Burma as could have been wanted just at the present time.

At Mandalay Jail the life and long-term prisoners made an attempt to break out on the evening of February 8th. The outbreak was promptly suppressed by the jail establishment, and the ringleaders were secured. Six of them were severely beaten, and sustained injuries about the head before they were subdued. The deputy jailer and turnkey were wounded in opposing the outbreak between the gates. The warder guard behaved very well, and the Natives of India, who were prisoners, rendered valuable help in suppressing it.

soners, rendered valuable help in suppressing it.

The case for Rs. 10,000 damages by Captain W. D. Morgan against the Secretary of State for India came to an untimely end at Myingyan last week. It had been ruled by the Recorder that the alleged wrongful act complained of, viz, the arrest of plaintiff by Lieutenant Lloyd, of the Somersetshire Regiment, having taken place there the plaint must be filed there; and it was so filed. The case was fixed for the 26th January, and plaintiff's counsel, Mr. Hare, and Mr. P. C. Sen for the defendant, left Rangoon for Myingyan. The plaintiff's counsel, however, was detained on the road, and seems to have mistaken the date fixed, which he thought was the 31st. Anyhow, he was not in Court when the case was called on, and after waiting a day for him the Deputy Commissioner, Captain W. F. Grey, said he could wait no longer and dismissed the suit.

NATIVE PRESS.

Retrenchment.—The present scale of salary of officials was prescribed upwards of a hundred years ago. At the present moment there can be no comparison with the time when the salary was fixed. Then a journey from India to England took three or four months. Now a journey from India to England does not take three or four weeks, and by means of telegrams the officials can get information in the course of a few hours. Then there were few Englishmen in this country, and those who came here considered themselves as exiles. There are now Europeans in every part of the country. Besides, with the increase of civilisation facilities have been afforded to Europeans with respect to living and moving about. There is, therefore, no necessity for allowing them the pay which they used to get. The administration of India will not suffer if officials are not now appointed from England on high pay.—The Dakka Gazette.

RAILWAY TO BURMA.—In order to satisfy the lust for territory, and to facilitate the commerce of English merchants, and to find employment for unemployed Englishmen, the merciful British Government ruined the Kingdom of Burma in the name of philanthropy, and at our expense. Burma was flooded with Burmese blood. The blood is still flowing, and even now the blood of our chest is being drained away in the shape of income-tax. The desires of the vulture-like English merchants have not ye; been satisfied. General Dickens has written a minute in which it is stated that the Government ought to extend railways from Bengal to North Burma. Troops may then easily be sent from India to Burma. General Dickens knows that the Government will be able to make no profit by this railway, which will cost four-and-a-half scores of rupees. In order to realise his own ends he has set forth the above argument.—The Dainik and Chandrika.

MEDICAL REGISTRATION.—The allopathic doctors are trying their best to curb the unpassed doctors, kavirajs, and hakims by legislation. The Government has confidence in the allopaths, and we fear it may pass a law at their instance. But the public have less confidence in them. The allopaths are not much cared for except in surgery, and the result of their treatment in surgery is not very great. The allopathic doctors are ostentatious, but as regards qualifications they are not much superior to Native medical practitioners. Besides, there are scarcely five persons in a thousand who can afford to pay for the visit and the medicine of allopaths. The Government ought not to show more sympathy with them than with any other class of medical men.—The Dakka Prokash.

Annexation of Sikkim.—The Bangabasi says:—The desire of the English for the annexation of Sikkim is gradually becoming stronger. The Raja has returned to his territory, but he has brought with him Tibetans in such large numbers that they have become all-powerful, and it is said that these Tibetans are threatening to invade the British territory. Whenever the English Government wishes to conquer a new country, it gives publicity to the misconduct of the ruler of that country. It is dealing with Sikkim in that manner. From this it appears that the English have fixed their sharp looks upon Sikkim. Some time ago we heard that preparations were being made for its conquest. It is a wonder that the complications on the North-Western frontier and the prolonged war in Burma have not lessened the earth-hunger of the British Government.—The Dainik and Chandrika says:

—We, as well-wishers, friends, and loyal subjects, beg the Wiceroy to act carefully in this Sikkim matter, and not be misled by the mischievous advice of intriguing men as he did in the Burmese war. Neither Sikkim nor Tibet were your enemies. You were sending Mr. Macaulay on a mission, and that alarmed them. Unfortunately no one is prepared to trust you any longer. Your dealings with Kabul and Burma have filled every one with apprehension. If you want to extend commerce in Tibet, better act simply as merchants. It will not do if you put cannon balls in your bags.

MR. GUILDFORD MOLESWORTH has reached Calcutta after a tour in Upper India. He proceeds shortly to Burma to examine the progress made with the Toungoo-Mandalay Railway. This line has been so rapidly pushed on that the first engine is expected to be got through within two months from the present time. Regular traffic will, of course, not be possible until next cold weather, as the earthwork must be allowed to settle during the rains. The line will be one of the most quickly built on record in India.

RECENT MOVEMENTS IN INDIA

On Saturday afternoon the annual meeting of the National Indian Association, in aid of social progress and education in India, was held at Willis's Rooms, St. James's. The chair was taken by Lord Hobhouse, and amongst those present ware Sir William Hunter, Sir Richard Meade, Sir Charles A. Turner, Mr. T. H. Thornton, General Macdonald, Mr. Hodgson Pratt, General Pollard, Lady Hobhouse, Lady Hunter, and Pratt, General I Mrs. Carmichael.

Mrs. Carmichael.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, referred to the progress of the association as shown in the annual report. The superintendence committee, the object of which was the selection of residences and the supervision of youths visiting England to study, had during the year five students under their charge, and several more were on their way to England. The council had been enabled, through the receipt of special donations, to make more grants than usual in aid of education in India. A branch of the association has been forded at Poonah, and the Punjah Association has been setablished as a correspondin India. A branch of the association has been formed at Poonah, and the Punjab Association has been established as a corresponding branch. At Bangalore the system of home education classes had at last been adopted. The aims and principles of the association being in harmony with the remarkable and increasing development of India, more and more workers were needed to carry forward the movement, and it was of the greatest importance that English and Indians should combine for objects affecting the public welfare. The balance-sheet showed a surplus of £32 after an expenditure for the year of £565, but a call to the extent of £33 had been made upon the reserve fund. The main item of expenditure had been the cost reserve fund. The main item of expenditure had been the cost of printing and circulating the Indian Magazine. A sum of £379 had been thus spent, but the council were now considering means for increasing the circulation and diminishing the ost of production of the Indian Magazine.

The report having been received and adopted,
Sir William Hunter proceeded to deliver an address on the subject of "Recent Movements in India." He said that the present movements in India had advanced upon three distinct but convergent lines. There were the educational movement, the scient property of the product of the subject of the su but convergent lines. There were the educational movement, the social movement, and the political movement, and each of these had many ramifications. Their advance was respectively symbolised by the nationalisation of Indian education, by the agitation against child marriage, and the compulsory celibacy of widows among the Hindus, and by the Indian Congress which, during three successive years, had met at Bombay, Calcutta, and Madras. The practical outcome of the educational movement had been the Educational Commission. Education was making very satisfactory progress before the institution of the Commission, but is progress was found to be too much in one direction, and to dangerouly divide the Indian people into two classes—a small minority highly educated on foreign methods, the Commission, but is progress was found to be too much in one direction, and to dangerouly divide the Indian people into two classes—a small minority highly educated on foreign methods, and a large majority hardly educated at all. The remedy for this state of things had been found in including in one homogeneous systemall the popular efforts which had before received small recognition from the State. The Commission recommended that all indigenous schools should be recognised and encouraged if they served any purpose of secular education; and declared that the elementary education of the people was that part of public instruction to which the efforts of the State should in a larger measure be directed. The Commission in organising a mechanism for carrying out this system enlisted the spirit of self-government then moving in India in the cause of public instruction. It established a plan for a system of board schools which sooner or later would cover the whole of India, and by which the education of the people would be practically managed by local representatives of the people themselves. The Indian people had quickly responded to the increased facilities thus afforded, and while in 1880, the year before the Commission sat, there had not been 2,000,000 people in India known to be under instruction two years after the Commission had met the number had risen to 3,500,000. The political result of the educational movement had been to make broader the basis of British rule, and its social results were numerous and complex. Conspicuous among the latter was the agitation to improve the position of women in India. He did not join in unreserved condemnation of the the latter was the agitation to improve the position of women the latter was the agitation to improve the position of women in India. He did not join in unreserved condemnation of the restrictions which were found in a woman's life in India, because those restrictions had a protective as well as a restraining end. In all the social relations which could be tested by statistics the position of women in India was exceptionally high. The proportion of female criminals and prisoners to male criminals and prisoners was but a mere fraction of the proportion existing in England. Female drunkenness in India was unknown, and a woman's life was safeguarded from poverty and crime in a manner which some of her English sisters might well envy. But the question had arisen whether Indian women did not purchase their safety at too high a price, and well envy. But the question had arisen whether indian women did not purchase their safety at too high a price, and whether security was not compatible with a larger measure of freedom. And this question had presented itself most prominently in the movement against child-marriage and enforced widowhood among the Hindoos. These customs were neither of them practised by the great masses of the people, but only among the great majority of the upper classes—the very people who came most strongly under Western modes of thought. In Bengal out of every thousand girls between the ages of five and nine 271 were married and 11 were widows. Among the and nine 271 were married and 11 were widows. Among the high caste all girls were either practically wives or widows before they reached their fifteenth year. It was estimated that there were about one million of young widows belonging to the Brahmin and Rajput castes, to whom the system of enforced celibacy must be a cruel infringement of their natural rights. To simply forbid such customs by legislation was difficult, for it was the imperative duty of a Hindoo father of good caste to absolutely secure that no daughter of his house should ever be without a protector; and the re-marriage of widows was closely bound up with the liability of the husband's heirs to provide that no woman of the family all indigenous schools should be recognised and encouraged if they served any purpose of secular education; and declared that husband's heirs to provide that no woman of the family all indigenous schools should be recognised and encouraged if they served any purpose of secular education; and declared that should ever be without a home. Native opinion must ultimately decide the question, many of the difficulties of which were already being removed. The leaders of Hindoo thought were beginning to perceive that these restrictions rested upon no injunctions of Holy Veda, but upon mediæval customs and texts; and British legislation had declared the right of Hindoo widows to marry again and to carry their property with them if they had renounced the Hindoo faith and adopted some other religion. A large sect of the Brahmin caste, which supplied the intellectual leaders of the people, was in favour of reform, and they were supported by large numbers in the lower castes. The more conservative castes would yield when they found that the only alternative was a loss of influence with the people. The Indian political movements found a necessary complement to the new spirit of progress which, we ourselves had awakened. In every district we had accustomed educated Indians to sit on municipal and local boards, and these men now desired to exert a more direct influence upon the Government. They had accordingly formed themselves into a permanent organisation, with annual gatherings in one or other of the great capitals of India. The movement belonged to no single province or section of the people of India. The general lines of the programme of the congress would sooner or later be followed. Indian political reformers had an opportunity such as seldom happened in the history of nations, of putting aside the local race antagonisms inseparable from the British position in India. He believed that no ruling Power ever felt so deeply desirous of doing what was right to a great dependency as England felt to India. England must now be made to understand in what what was right to a great dependency as England felt to India. England must now be made to understand in what direction the right course really lay, and this could not be done by exaggerated statements. If Indian reformers were to win the sympathics of England it must be by convincing the conscious of England and they must dispuise from their conscience of England, and they must dismiss from their minds the methods of English party politics. They had two influences at work always on their side. One was the conviction deep down in the heart of the British nation that India was the biggest piece of work that the Anglo-Saxon race had been called upon to complete, and that they must stand or fall in the present, and be judged in the future by the way in which that work was done. And the second influence was the conscientious desire of England to do what was right in this great national affair. He honestly believed that the wellwishers of Indian progress, political and social, would most surely gain their ends by temperance in their demands—a genuine temperance both in aim and thought.

Sir Charles Turner then moved, and Mr. D. Naoroj seconded, a vote of thanks to Sir William Hunter for his address; and, the motion having been carried, a second vote of thanks to Lord Hobhouse for presiding brought the proceedings to a MAJOR H. MELLISS, of the Bombay Staff Corps, who recently visited Patiala and other Native States, was, it is understood, engaged on special duty in connection with the recent offers of military assistance by the Native States of Punjab. Before deciding upon the form in which advantage, if any, should be taken of the loyal offers, it was obviously necessary for the Government to ascertain in what the military resources of the States in question consisted.

HAVING noticed how frequently fatal and severe accidents. occur through persons being run over in the streets, and noticing also that on the ordinary tramway car each wheel is fitted with a guard, it strikes one's attention as being very sensible, and likely to prevent fatal damage to any person falling before the wheels of the car, as it would keep him from under them the wheels of the car, as it would keep him from under them until the car was stopped, or else throw him out of the way. Now, could not some simple wheelguard be adopted on all vehicles? Say an iron barsimilar to that which holds the step, projecting downward in front of each wheel, so that any person falling before it would be caught and kept from under them; the ordinary step might be affixed to it. The wheelguards on the tramcars seem to answer excellently, and effectually protect any horse which happens to fall down from being hurt by the wheels, and they would no doubt do the same with regard to human beings.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

A LION AMONG THE LADIES.*

What makes the army so popular alike with the rich and the poor, the mighty and the lowly, the ugly and the pretty? Of course handsome uniforms have a great deal to answer for; but if "A Lion Among the Ladies" be true to life—and have not the slightest wish to contest the point—the chief charm of the "service" consists in the circumstances that one is always either getting into debt oneself or trying to get someone else out of a like predicament, and that every person is in love with somebody or another. There is also at times—at any rate, in this instance—a little "sauce piquante" in the fact—with which, of course, everyone but the husband himself is familiar—that the colonel's wife used in early days to write foolish letters to a youthful admirer. "It goes without for to say" that this happy—from an author's point of view—cirsay" that this happy—from an author's point of view—circumstance does duty for much of the plot; and if there be added scapegrace misadventures, frantic mothers endeavouring to reclaim erring and possibly repentant sons, sisters economising in order to enable their extravagant brothers to enter and "go the pace" in an extravagant regiment, it may readily be imagined that there is ample scope for fervid imagination and uncontrolled freedom of thought on the part of the writer, with the received of movement or well are interest. with the sequence of amusement as well as interest on that

The story is pretty, and nicely written. If, too, there be little which is extra exciting, at least there is nothing to offend, and everything in the end comes right. Deceit gets into terrible trouble; one of the nastiest heroes marries the nastiest fewering. of heroines. The irascible old Colonel gets pacified when he discovers that things were not so bad as he had imagined, and the numerous characters in the work are disposed of with dexterous skill, and to the entire satisfaction of all parties

For a garrison mess-table, and for the many young maidens who affect the military in the off-chance of captivating a son of Mars, "A Lion Among the Ladies," is likely to be popular. The author has considerable dramatic skill, his characters never lack life. It is not pretended that Mr. Gaskell is a second Lever, but he can, at least, be complimented on having achieved a reputation above the crowd of writers who indulge in coarseness, and think it wit, and revel in indelicacy, and depin it indicative of genius.

THE BATTLE OF TORFREK.+

This is the title of a very beautifully printed and elaborately finished—so far as the art of the typographer, lithographer, and binder is concerned—book, written in vindication of the and binder is concerned—book, written in vindication of the gallant officer above-named against certain aspersions cast upon him as a commander in the field, by special correspondents of the Press and certain editors. The author of the work, Mr. William Galloway, Corresponding member of the Society of Antiquaries in Scotland, is no half-and-half defender of a friend. Scots proverbially stick close to "brither" Scots, but in Mr. Galloway, Sir John McNeill has found an advocate who can not only defend him, but who can strike hard at all who have assailed him. The only question is whether it was worth while to take so much trouble to show that the Press critics were wrong. The story of the Arab "surprise" on McNeill's zeriba on the 22nd of March, 1885, was no doubt made too much of for sensastory of the Arab "surprise" on McNeill's zeriba on the 22nd of March, 1885, was no doubt made too much of for sensational purposes by the Press. As Mr. Galloway vigorously puts it:—"Even on the hot sand of the desert the blood so lavishly expended on March 22nd, 1885, was not dry, and if we except those dragged from the interior of the zeribas, not the body of an Arab on the battlefield had been touched, ere already, four thousand miles off, intelligence of the fight was being spread through London like wildfire. By the next morning through every agency the Press could command, in forms so distorted as to be almost grotesque in their absurdity, over Britain and the civilised world, a similar result took place. Raised to lips panic-stricken, and in the first hot haste of the 'unexpected,' ignorant of all that was essential to even a moderately-accurate statement of the facts, Rumour's of the 'unexpected,' ignorant of all that was essential to even a moderately-accurate statement of the facts, Rumour's brazen clarion could but ring out notes of discredit and dismay." The accusation against Sir John McNeill when the news of the Arab attack (in which he lost some 276 men, exclusive of transport and native drivers, and 720 camels) reached England was that he had been taken unawares, and had not sufficiently by scouting or otherwise guarded his force from such a contingency. "As the most galling imputation that could be levelled against a high-minded and honourable man—the most fatal stab that could be inflicted on a reputation won by hard and successful service in various quarters of the globe—he was charged with being 'surprised,' and with having his troops in an 'unprepared state,' and neglecting the most ordinary precautions a wise and wary general would naturally adopt!" Mr. Galloway writes, it will be seen, warmly, but the overwhelming mass of evidence with which he supports his case shows that wherever the blame should have rested, it should not have been placed upon the shoulders of General McNeill. He was, on the day in question, entrusted with the duty of simply "fatigue" work, i.e., of constructing certain zeribas a few miles out from Suakin, Osman Digna's force being then supposed to be at Tamai, some fifteen or sixforce being then supposed to be at Tamai, some fifteen or sixteen miles distant. The Headquarters authorities at Suakin had made quite certain that the Arabs had been effectually overawed, and that there could be no enemy lurking near McNeill's force. As it happened, however, the Arabs in ambuscade were waiting their opportunity alone by and MNeill of the opportunity of t tunity close by; and McNeill, after encountering extraordinary difficulties in forcing his way a few miles through the brush-wood, had scarcely time to commence forming his zeriba (about which he had placed a line of outposts and all his cavalry as vedettes) than he was attacked by 5,000 Hadendowas. There was a stampede amongst the transport animals, and terror and confusion amongst the Native drivers, whom the Arabs slaughtered without mercy, but the Arabs were driven off with terrible loss, leaving upwards of one-fourth of their number dead or wounded on the field. According to Lord Wolseley himself this "hard-fought action" broke the spell of Osman Digna's power—but the Press critics blamed Sir John M'Neill for not understanding that he was going out from Suakin to fight instead of to form zeribas / Mr. Galloway certainly demolishes all the Press criticisms regarding the matter. The question, however, as we have said, is—is it worth the trouble now to do so? Sir John McNeill's reputation as a good and gallant officer has not suffered in the eyes of his superiors or of his countrymen. Even the Press critics have possibly forgotten their criticisms, but one thing we may say, and that is—that lucky is the commander who when attacked by the critics can find so doughty and fearless a champion as Mr. William Galloway.

THE RUSSIA'S HOPE.*

Poor old England seems in a bad way. Some years ago she was annihilated, on paper at least, in the pages of the "Battle of Dorking." Now she is hurled to destruction, again on paper, by "The Russia's Hope." That time the battle was by land—on this occasion the defeat is to be at sea. That the country of the Czars cordially hates and detests England we do not attempt to dispute, nor are we particularly concerned to do not attempt to dispute, nor are we particularly concerned to lament over a feeling which, at any rate, we ourselves are prepared to return with interest. We do not hesitate to avow that as we despise liars amongst individuals, so do we scorn deviators from the path of rectitude amongst nations. We therefore assume that Russia will, if she can, blow us out of the water, and we equally trust that if we can we shall frustrate her pious endeavours. But how is she to do it? It is all very well for works of fiction to narrate in glowing terms, inspired by national patriotism, that this ship was sent to the bottom and that craft blown up—that this vessel was rammed and that floating monster torpedoed; but in real warfare things might be different, and it is just possible that our Admiralty might not different, and it is just possible that our Admiralty might not be caught napping, that our commanders might not go to sleep and wake up in another world, that nuts might not come off, and the machinery, as a consequence, become disabled just at the moment when victory was in the balance.

But the English public owe a debt of gratitude to the unknown Russian author, in so far as he has bid them take note that the Commillant has a support to the English public owe as the last bid them take note that the Commillant has a support to the English who that the Czar will, when he can, attack England; and he who runs may now read in this interesting brochure what diabolical modes of warfare will be adopted in the future by the nation which some would have us believe is so holy, so pure, so heavenly-minded, that this poor earth is too wicked, naughty an abode for virtues so transcendent as to pass man's understanding. Precisely; "no fellow can understand" Russia's honesty, or grasp the fact that the Northern Colossus is ought but a seething mass of corruntion, villainy, and hypocrisy. but a seething mass of corruption, villainy, and hypocrisy.

MAD OR MARRIED ?

We live in an extraordinary age, and, as a result, it must be supposed, we have extraordinary stories. "Mad or Married" is no exception to this somewhat sweeping assertion. The father of the family drops down dead, and the brother finds himself sole executor, and therefore all powerful. Beyond a daughter of the deceased, for whom he has to provide, he did not get much. So far all is plain sailing, but now comes the funny part of the business. The young maiden, not wishing to marry her cousin—this was the wish of the uncle—decamped on the very morning of the approaching nuptials. When found, she calmly proclaims that she is married to another person. Then come drownings, savings, and all sorts of strange things; amongst the number the husband is made to put in an appearance. Every one is perplexed, and proclaims the girl mad; she, on the contrary, persistently asserts that she is married. The explanation is not as cynics would proclaim that the latter involves the former—this would be cutting, but not proper. No! the reader is asked to believe that two persons had been united in spirit; though they had never seen one another, forsooth their affinities were such that they were "twain and one flesh." What an astounding doctrine! Fancy the dangers of life, if to all the perils of medern society be added the risk of finding oneself united one fine morning to an old lady of ninety summers, whom, never having seen, one most perforce love devotedly. The only advantage of the arrangement is that school bills are not likely, under the system, to be large or extravagant. But we had forgotten the spirits can do everything and anything. Perhaps, therefore, the poor husband finds the family ready to hand—as part of the contract. Well may the author confess that he does not expect people to believe this sort of thing. Thank you, Mr. Davidson, for your honesty; but we have no objection to read a work of this sort pour passer le temp. From this point of view an hour will be "eaten up," perhaps frivolously, but not vexatiously.

THE PROFESSOR OF POETRY AT OXFORD AND THE WITNESS OF ART.*

A pretty quarrel, indeed! Not so much as to whether art is on the decline or otherwise; this is merely the peg on which Mr. Bayliss draws attention to some startling similarities of language on the part of himself and Professor Palgrave, of Oxford fame. It is obvious that in such cases priority of publication is the sole criterion of originality, and from this point of view Mr. Bayliss wins in a canter by an interval of twelve years. But what says the worthy Professor of Poetry at the classical Alma Mater? Surely he cannot allow "curiosity of modern literature" to pass unnoticed? When the clash of arms resounds and the contest waxes sore between combatants, prudent bystanders withdraw to a distance; so we sit with folded arms awaiting the issue.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for March promises to give, "as occasion warrants," certain biographies of officers who have suffered under the present arbitrary rules of compulsory retirement. The series commences in the number under review with that of Major-General Knox Leet, V.C. (portrait), whose distinguished services are plainly told to show the cruel injustice done to a good and gallant soldier by the enforcement of the rule in question. There are several excellent professional papers, which cannot fail to be interesting to readers connected with the Services:—"Military Bridges," "Dogs in War," "Portable Railways for Field Purposes," "New Sea-going Torpedo Boat," &c., all well illustrated. Major-General X. (who is he?) gives his reminiscences of Sark; and the story of the Conquest of the Punjab, so often told, continues to be retold again. In several places throughout the magazine there is a marked improvement in the illustrations, but in Dr. Dickinson's paper on "Lucknow" the portraits given of Sir Henry Havelock and Sir James Outram can hardly be called flattering likenesses of those departed heroes. The pictures, too, of the dogs, in the editor's article on the use of those animals in war, will, we fear, rather remind Anglo-Indians of the jackal than of "man's firmest friend." An illustrated Service magazine, such as the Naval and Military, ought to command a wide circulation both at home and abroad and amongst the Foreign Powers, and this it is sure to do so long as its letterpress and illustrations are kept up to the highest standard of interest and ability.

The March number of the Army and Navy Magazine (W1 H. Allen and Co.) has some very intelligent and impartia remarks by J. C. D. on Admiral Sir Thomas Symond's letter to Lord George Hamilton regarding the view taken by the latter on the condition of the British navy as reported in the Times of February 4th last. The truth, as the writer in the magazine points out, is neither with the pessimist nor the optimist; though the balance, he says, is rather with the latter, the British navy being still, in spite of all shortcomings, the first in the world. At the same time, it is allowed that there are many points put forward by Admiral Symonds which should engage the attention of the authorities. A comprehensive summary of the Naval Events of 1887, which is commenced in the present number, will be found useful and interesting, and an able paper by Captain Simpson on "Volunteer Guns for the Field" is likely to draw forth some discussion about the writer's views, especially as regards his advocacy of the larger employment of machine guns in lieu of field guns. The military economy of Germany continues to be explained by Captain a Court, and an Eye-Witness contributes a further paper about scenes in Burma. Besides the serial, "The Old Adam," which is running its course, there is what purports to be a true story, "What Would You Have Done?" "Furlough" gives the leading events of the month as affecting the Services, pleasantly, as usual, and Colone! Cooper King contributes another chapter for the edification of those who are still interested in the life of George Washington.

The Faber Birthday Book (R. Washbourne) is an elegant little volume of quotations from the Prose and Poetical Works of the celebrated Father Faber, compiled by the hands of the gifted daughter of a well-known Anglo-Indian soldier and man of letters, Colonel W. F. B. Laurie. Faber, the friend of Morris, Newman, Pusey, and other of the leading spirits of the Tractarian party at Oxford, was a man of deep emotional nature, and nervously sensitive. After winning a fellowship at his University, and working for many years as a parish clergyman in the Church of England, the religious doubts which at one time led him almost to Calvinism reacted and made him a convert to Romanism. Amongst the many brilliant men who were won over to that Church in those days there was no one more devoted to her than Father Faber. But the change of creed wrought no change in the catholicity of his nature, which was one desirous of embracing all men in its loving sympathy. His hymns still hold their place in the Anglican hymn-book, and there is little of a sectarian spirit in the works he wrote after leaving the church in which he was ordained. Miss Laurie's compilation from his writing shows that she has felt the influence of his teachings, for her work has evidently been a labour of love. The selections which she has made show much care and taste; she has culled, as it were, the best flowers of her author's fancy, and given many poetic and useful moral beauties for everyday life. The little volume is (in printing phraseology) very well "got up," and the tasteful ornamentations of the cover and title-page are from designs by another of Colonel Laurie's talented daughters.

The Art Journal for March is somewhat different from the ordinary issues, in so far that, with a few exceptions, all the illustrations are of the mezzo-tint school of art; but they are remarkably good of their sort, and we have, as usual, nothing but praise to record.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MARCH 5, 1888.

WANTED: A COURAGEOUS VICEROY.

UNDER the above heading the Indian Statesman takes as a subject for moralising on the state of the finances of India-the resignation of Lord Dufferin. Mr. Robert Knight, the conductor of the Statesman, is at present, we believe, the oldest and the most experienced of Anglo-Indian journalists now in India, and he is supposed to be thoroughly in the confidence of the more advanced Natives of Bengal and Bombay. It has not been our fortune to side with him in the views which he has generally taken on questions of Indian polity, and especially regarding those questions which concern the attitude of the Paramount Power towards its Indian subjects. Mr. Knight was a Home Ruler (for India) long before the words We did not became such a party cry at home. think then, nor do we think now, that India is vet fitted for that wonderful panacea for all political ills to the extent to which Mr. Knight would recommend. He would, we think, have her run before she can yet walk. But, outside of what we have been inclined to think as his "crotchets" or "hobbies," we have always recognised Mr. Knight's undoubted abilities, and his great knowledge of Indian financial questions. We may not have agreed to his premises, but we could not deny his skill in arguing them out to his own conclusions. In the article to which we refer now he touches upon an old and favourite theme. He holds that it is the wrongful and ceaseless exactions made by the English Government upon the Indian Treasury that are the sole cause of India's present embarrassments. "The secret of all our embarrassments, and of these ever-recurring deficits, is the fact that the Government of India has no proper control whatever of the expenditure side of the accounts. Neither the Viceroy nor his Council have any power to delare what part of the expenditure made by the Treasury is the just liability of India, and what part thereof ought, as a matter of equity, to be defrayed by the mother country." In another sentence he says, "No one requires to be told that the Viceroy and his Finance Minister have no option but to obey the orders of the Secretary of State for India." But having thus pointed out how powerless the Viceroy of India is in the matter, the editorial pen runs away with itself. After paying a tribute to Lord Dufferin's natural gracefulness, tact, and geniality, we read:-"What India wants is a Viceroy prepared, as representative of its people, to give deep, earnest, and influential expression to the conviction that the annual Budgets are a pretence, so long as India is bound hand and foot under the control of another Power, whose interests are permitted to decide what the annual apportionment of their great joint burden shall be. The Government of India under existing arrangements is the only representative body, we say, that the Indian people It cannot divest itself of this representative character even if it would. Power means responsibility, and the highest responsibility that is lodged in the Government of India is the charge that it should represent faithfully not the interests of the English taxpayer or the English Treasury, but the interests of the great Empire that it is appointed to govern. What India, therefore, wants is not a gentle, graceful, and smiable Vicercy like Lord Dufferin, who honestly desires to show all the deference he can to the wishes of the Indian people, but a Viceroy, and still more a Finance Minister, who dares to place his hand upon the cause of our embarrass_ ment, and to say plainly, with the trumpet ring of couviction in his tone, that England is systematically devolving her own proper burdens upon the people of India-What India therefore wants is the awakening of her Government to the fact that, as 'representing' India, it is. its bounden obligation to resist, with its whole might, the perpetuation of a system under which there can never be anything but a deficit in the Indian balance-sheet. To accept, blandly and blindly, the dictation of the Horse Guards and the Treasury in Whitehall of what India is topay is to betray the first and highest responsibility that. devolves upon the Viceroy in Council. They are supposed. by the nation to govern India justly, and to refuse every demand upon her treasury that is not plainly grounded in conscience and equity." This is all very well on paper, and no doubt it will be quoted approvingly in many quarters; but the writer must surely know that a Viceroy who would thus deliberately defy the Secretary of Statefor India backed by Parliament would have a short reign of office. We are not justifying the manner and the means. adopted of burdening the revenues of India with Home charges which will not bear scrutiny. That is a matter which will sooner or later have to be examined into. But. we hold that the blame does not rest with the Viceroy of India or his Finance Minister, but with the system [inaugurated and settled by both Houses of Parliament, by which the hands of the former are weakened instead of strengthened.

The Babus and Native Manufactures.—We must manage our own business. Why should we depend upon others for a business which we ourselves can manage? For the improvement of our manufactures the English may encourage us in words, but who will do good to others at the expense of his own interests? The Babus imagine that the establishment of one or two technical schools will remove the wants of this country. But Indian manufactures will not be preserved if a thousand technical schools are established. Bombay has established mills for manufacturing cloths. Why, then, is the cloth from Manchester imported in such large quantities? The weaver caste have now become Baishnabs. The Babu class understand that the English cloths ought not to be encouraged. Why, then, is no remedy found? If we pledge ourselves not to use English cloths a great deal may be done. The demands for English goods will decrease if the influence of English civilisation is lessened. It will be a great thing if for the sake of Native manufactures the Babus adopt Hindu custom to a certain extent. If you don't do your own work it will never be done. Shall we not be able to convince the Babus?—The Dainik and Chandrika.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.--Feb. 28.

INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

The EARL OF KIMBERLEY.—I wish to ask the noble viscount the Secretary of State for India whether he will be able to lay upon the table of the House the report which I understand has been made by the Commission in India on the Civil Service of that Empire,

VISCOUNT CROSS.—I should not like to answer the question of the noble earl without taking the first opportunity of tendering my thanks to Sir Chas. Wilson and Sir Cha. Turner, and the other gentlemen engaged with them on that Commission. the other gentlemen engaged with them on that Commission, for the great pains and trouble they have taken in sifting the matter through and making a report—(hear, hear). As to the question of the noble earl, my answer is that I received a telegram from the Viceroy the other day asking me whether I had any objection to the publication of the report. My answer was that I had none, and unless I hear again from him in the course of the week I will lay the report on the table.

INDIAN ARMY CLOTHING CONTRACTS.

Mr. Howle asked the Under-Secretary of State whether the terms which the Secretary of State considered misleading in the advertisements by the Superintendent of Army Clothing, Madras, for tenders for the year 1889-90, were those of the paragraph numbered 3 in the specifications—viz., "Articles of European manufacture are not required"; if so, would those terms exclude goods made in Lancashire and Yorkshire, and would they freely admit goods made in the United States of terms exclude goods made in Lancashire and Yorkshire, and would they freely admit goods made in the United States of America; what was the total cost of advertisements last year for the goods, amounting to £17,000 in value, of which only £24 in value were contracted for; and would the Secretary of State for India feel obliged, in the interests of the public service, to cancel any and all contracts entered into in contravention of the pledge given to the House on the 16th of March, 1887.

OVERCROWDING INDIAN STEAMERS.

Commander Bethell asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether his attention had been directed to a report on for India whether his attention had been directed to a report on the loss of the steamer Sir John Lawrence, addressed by the members of the Marine Court of Inquiry to the Government of Bengal, which report stated, upon the evidence given in the inquiry, that not only was the Sir John Lawrence carrying more than her proper complement of passengers, but that "every inducement exists for the captains or even for the owners of the vessels engaged in the Chanobally trade to avail themselves of the opportunity to carry more than the licensed number of passengers;" "that the method of survey adopted under the auspices of the Port Commissioners and port officers is extremely unsatisfactory, and in urgent need of speedy and thorough reform;" and if he could inform the House whether the Government of Bengal were taking steps to correct these abuses.

Sir J. Gorst.—The attention of the Secretary of State has been directed to the report in question. The Government of Bengal has already taken measures with a view to correcting these abuses. It has directed the Commissioner of Police at Calcutta and the Commissioner of Orissa to report fully upon the whole subject, with a view to the introduction of more stringent regulations.

THE INDIAN SALT DUTY.
Sir G. CAMPBELL asked the Under Secretary of State for India whether, while in all other respects the increased Indian salt duty is brought into immediate operation, in accordance with the practice of this country, any exception is made in favour of British merchants whose cargoes afloat on the way to India are exempt, so that they would pay the lesser duty while they reaped the profit of the increased price resulting from the power duty. from the new duty.

BOMBAY HARBOUR.

In reply to Mr. J. Maclean,
Sir J. Gorst said,—Estimates and plans are being prepared and schemes have been submitted by the Secretary of State to the consideration of the Admiralty as to providing graving dock accommodation in Bombay harbour for ironclads and large mercentile steepers. large mercantile steamers.

JUDICIAL STAMPS FOR INDIA.

In reply to Mr. H. Heaton and Mr. King, Sir J. Gorst said,—The contract for judicial stamps for India expires in a short time, and the further supply will be open to competition among a limited number of selected firms. In 1886 the late Secretary of State made an arrangement with the Board of Inland Revenue, by which the latter were to act as his agents in, among other things, the renewal of such contracts for the supply of stamps as might expire from time to time. It is in pursuance of this arrangement that invitations to tender for the supply of judicial stamps for India have, since the question was placed on the paper, been sent out by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. The Board, however, acting in this matter as the agents of the Secretary of State, will take no step of importance without consulting him.

THE RUBY MINES IN BURMA
In reply to Mr. J. Maclean,
Sir J. Gorst said,—It is impossible to state the exact loss to the revenues of the year by the working of the ruby mines having been postponed. On the other hand, the exhaustion of the mine has not commenced, and the revenue lost in the present year will, in ordinary course, be realised in years to come.

OBITUARY.

THE LATE GENERAL RICHARD HAMILTON, C.B.—General Richard Hamilton, C.B., who has just died at Nethway, Torquay, entered the army as ensign in 1828, receiving his lieutenant's commission in 1836. The deceased officer had seen service in the Burmese War in 1853, and was present at Longhoo. He was second in command of the Sitang detachment at the taking of Beeling, being also present at Pegu, for for which he received a medal with clasp. General Hamilton served in the Indian Mutiny campaign in 1857 and 1858, including the affairs of Kulivia, the Battle of Banda, and the surrender of Kirwee. For his services in Central India, he received a medal with clasp, being created a C.B. in 1875. He was upon the staff of general officers retired under the Royal Warrant of June 25, 1881, and was formerly of the Madras Staff Corps. Staff Corps.

MAJOR-GENERAL THOMAS BROUGHAM, Royal (Bengal) Artillery, died on the 29th ult., at Bishop Yard, Penrith, in his seventy-first year. He entered the Service in December 1835, and served in Afghanistan in 1841-42. He took part in the defence in Candahar in May, 1842, and the operations of the Candahar Force, leading to the reoccupation of Cabul (medal). He served in the Sutlej campaign in 1846, including the battle of Sobraon (medal); also at the capture of Kangra in 1846. He commanded the Peshawur Mcuntain Train in various engagements on the Trans-Indus Frantier from 1853. various engagements on the Trans-Indus Frontier from 1853 to 1859. He served on the Peshawur frontier during the Indian Mutiny (medal). He also has the medal for services on the North-West Frontier of India.

COLONEL EDWARD STIRLING RIVETT-CARNAC; late of the 11th Hussars, died on the 28th ult., at Southsea, aged forty-11th Hussars, died on the 28th ult., at Southsea, aged forty-seven. He entered the service in January, 1858, and served in the Indian Mutiny campaign, attached to a troop of the 7th Hussars, from March to June 1858 (medal). He served with Fane's Horse during the China campaign, of 1860, and was present at the action of Sinho, taking of the Taku Forts, actions of September 18 and 21, and subsequent operations before Pekin; was extra orderly officer to Brigadier Pattie during the actions of August 12 and September 18 (mentioned in despatches, medal with two clasps). He served throughout the Abyssinian campaign of 1868 with the Transport Train, and was present at the fall of Magdala (mentioned in dispatches, medal).

A STATEMENT has been published that the Legislative Department of the Government of India has under preparation a Land Revenue and Rent Code for India. All that is really being done is that the Legal Member is having a collection made of the Revenue Laws of the various Provinces to be printed and bound together in one volume for the purpose of casy reference.

ALL who have been in Indian stations or cantonments during the hot weather know how to appreciate the luxury of ice. To such a new invention called the "Eureka Ice-Machine and Refrigerator," will come as a boon and a blessing. It is an invention which does away with all complicated machinery, the patentee using only a harmless salt, and by a most simple process bringing water to the freezing point in three minutes. For meat or other articles of diet a dry cold air is secured instead of the damp air of the common ice-machines. A domestic machine will, in addition to preserving perishables that may be placed within it. make ten pounds of easy reference. perishables that may be placed within it, make ten pounds of ice per hour. The cost of the simple chemicals required for the new machine, as compared with the ice in the old one, is infinitesimal. The salts used, for example, are furnished with each machine in quantity sufficient to last one year, and with each machine in quantity sumetent to last one year, and can be purchased from the company, or its agents, afterwards at a small cost. The machines can be seen at work at 100c, Queen Victoria-street, where our Anglo-Indian friends can also gain every information concerning this very promising invention from the very courteous secretary of the "Eureka Refrigerating Company, Limited."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL A. TOWER, 1st Battalion Suffolk Regiment, has been appointed to the command of the Kasauli Depôt, vice Major G. W. N. Rogers, permitted to resign.

CAPTAIN R. H. BERESFORD, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, has been appointed Station Staff Officer at Ranikhet, vice Captain H. Ringwood, whose tenure of the appointment has expired. Major T. H. Kirby, Cheshire Regiment, will be placed on the Retired List on the 23rd March, 1888, under the age clause of the Royal Warrant.

CAPTAIN J. S. WILLET, 1st Dragoon Guards, and Captain A. G. Braithwaite, 2nd Battalion Northumberland Fusiliers, have been ordered home for depôt duty.

THE following transfers and postings of Royal Engineer officers of the Military Works Department have been ordered:
—Captain F. N. Maude from the Lahore Division is transferred to the Quetta Division; Lieutenant J. A. Gibbon, from the Lucknow to the Sibi Division; Lieutenant E. A. Edgell, from the Head-Quarters to the Bombay Defence Division; and Lieutenant C. E. Norton, on return to India, is posted to the Presidency and Oudh Command.

THE undermentioned officers having been selected for employment in the Intelligence Branch, Quartermaster-General's Department, Upper Burma, have been attached to the Field Force from the date of joining:—Lieutenant R. G. H. Hughes, 2nd Oxfordshire Light Infantry; Lieutenant A. Vans Agnew, 3rd Madras Light Cavalry; Lieutenant H. B. H. Wright, Royal Engineers; and Lieutenant E. W. M. Norris, 2nd Middlesex Regiment.

MAJOR C. T. Prymon, and Battelian Durbon, Light Leaven.

Major C. T. Peyton, 2nd Battalion Durham Light Infantry, has been ordered to Deolali Depôt to officiate as commandant during the absence of Colonel W. R. Truman, on CAPTAIN (Brevet-Major) C. B. Wilkinson and Captain H. S. Andrews-Speed, Royal Engineers, doing duty with the Madras Sappers and Miners, have been ordered to proceed to England to go through the next course of military engineering at Chatham, commencing on the 1st of April next.

THE Indian Volunteers have been much pleased to hear that Captain Henry Park Airey, New South Wales Artillery, who volunteered for service in Burma and was wounded in action when employed with the Gardner guns, has been admitted a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order.

THE presentation of medals to the 2nd Battalion the King's The presentation of medals to the 2nd Battalion the King's (Liverpool Regiment), Fyzabad, for the Burma campaign, 1885-1887, took place on the 7th February at a fulldress parade. After a few congratulatory words from Colonel A. A. Le Mesurier, C.B., commanding, the battalion was formed from line into hollow square, and officers commanding companies were called to the front to receive the decorations for the non-commissioned officers and men of their respective companies. They then issued them in the usual manner, each man falling out on recept of the medal.

TELEGRAPHIC expenditure in Upper Burma having alarmingly increased, stringent orders have been issued to heads of departments to put a stop to all telegraphic reports containing information of a routine nature, such as arrivals and departures, changes of personnel, returns, transfers, casualties among men, horses and ponies (except in action), cases of epidemic disease among horses and ponies, &c. The attention of all officers commanding corps and posts, &c., has also been called to the subject, in view to a reduction of expenditure.

THE Government of India have sanctioned the formation of a Volunteer Reserve in Burma on the same conditions as those sanctioned for the Volunteer Reserve to be raised in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh in March, 1885, and have called for an early report showing the progress which has been made in its formation. If no further progress is made in Burma than has been made in Oudh and Calcutta, we fear that the expected report will prove disappointing.

New colours have been presented at Agra to the 16th Bengal Infantry, the Lucknow Regiment, by Lady Roberts, in the presence of the Commander-in-Chief and Staff.

An army circular just issued notifies that the Governor-General in Council has much gratification in announcing to General in Council has much gratification in announcing to the Native armies in India that the sanction of Her Majesty's Government has been accorded to the grant of good conduct medals with annuities and gratuities on the following scale:— To each regiment of cavalry and infantry a silver medal inscribed "for meritorious conduct" with an annuity of Rs. 25 for duffadars and havildars only. Two silver medals will be given annually in each regiment for long service and good conduct, with a gratuity of Rs. 25 open to the rank and file. Duffadars or havildars must have 18 years' service and privates 20 years. The men will be chosen by selection. The order takes effect from Aprill. It is sure to be highly appreciated by the Native army. the Native army.

THE MOULMEIN-YUNNAN RAILWAY.

THE MOULMEIN-YUNNAN RAILWAY.

Mr. Holt Hallett replying to Lieut. Younghusband's letter to the Pioneer, doubts the accuracy of a number of the statements made, and says his doubts in the matter can be upheld on reference to Admiralty charts, Government reports on recent surveys, and other official data. The following are extracts from Mr. Holt Hallett's letter:—

Lieut. Younghusband assumes that Maulmain (Moulmein) and Bangkok are on a par as seaports, both having bars at their mouths. We will first take the Maulmain river. Vessels drawing twenty feet can therefore proceed up to Maulmain during the lowest tides, and drawing thirty feet during the highest spring tides. A dredger in a few days could deepen the water over the nock of the shoal and allow vessels drawing twenty-four feet to proceed up to Maulmain throughout the year. The port is, therefore, one of the finest in the East, and the anchorage opposite is sufficient for a very large fleet of vessels. Let us see what our Consul at Bangkok says of that port. In his report for 1884 it appears that:—"All steamers with the exception of those drawing less than thirteen or fourteen feet have to complete loading their cargo outside the bar (this adds three shillings a ton to the cost of carriage) during the north-east monsoor. During the south-west monsoon they load at the island of Ko Si Chang, sixteen miles south-east of the bar." Bangkok, moreover, has the disadvantage of having only one tide in the twenty-four hours The lowest cost of carriage from Bangkok to Singapore is ten shillings a ton, and Singapore is about equidistant from Europe, and more than 1,000 miles further from Calcutta than Maulmail.

Another unwarrantable statement is that:—"Water transport, all over the world, is cheaper than land transport." If the writer of this presumed axiom had taken the trouble to read the last Blue-book published on Burmah (No. 1 of 1887, page 44), it is shown that the over the world, is cheaper than land transport." If the writer of this presumed axiom had taken the trouble to read the last Blue-book published on Burmah (No. 1 of 1887, page 44), it is shown that the railway from Rangoon to Toungoo carries grain at two-fifths of the charge levied for water carriage. The railway rate for the carriage of grain from Zimmé to Bangkok, assuming the same mile rate as between Rangoon and Toungoo, would be ten times as cheap as the water carriage.

riage of grain from Zimmé to Bangkok, assuming the same mile rate as between Rangoon and Toungoo, would be ten times as cheap as the water carriage.

On the above two pretty little cobwebs woven in his own brain Lieutenant Younghusband bases in the attack upon our proposal to connect Burmah with Siam and China by railway. Take away these and his whole fabric tumbles to the ground.

Our critic then asserts that the annual export of cattle from Siam is "so very small;" this statement hardly tallies with our consular report for Siam in 1885, where we find: "The export of cattle overland to Burmah exceeds 40,000 head yearly.

There are several other interesting little paragraphs in this report which might serve to educate the adviser of British financiers. On page 6 it is stated that: "The manufacture of native hand-woven cotton cloths has of late years d-creased considerably, the imported goods, though not so durable, being far cheaper." Half the population of Bangkok of Lower Siam b.ing Chinese, how does this tally with the amusing statement of our critic, who, forgetting—if he ever knew—that China and Indo-China stand second only to India as purchasers of British cotton goods. What can have become of that £391,900 worth of cotton manufactures which entered Bangkok from Great Britain and India, chiefly from Great Britain, in 1885?

Our critic even denies the likelihood of a moderate amount of passenger traffic for the railway—he says it would be very small. This is rather hard, as the British Shans and Chinese are renowned for their travelling propensities. If our critic were possessed of so much enthusiasm as to become imacinative, he could nicture the cut-off regions he travelling propensities. If our critic were possessed of so much enthusiasm as to become imaginative, he could picture the cut-off regions he siasm as to become imaginative, he could picture the cut-off regions he has passed through opened out by railways, carriage by land decreased to one-thirtieth of its present cost in the Siamese and British Shan States, and to one-twelfth in the South-Western provinces of China: and he would not think me other than practical when I assume that the then probable increase in British and British Indian import trade to the 112 million inhabitants, who inhabit the region to the East of Burmah, would be proportionate to that taken by the 9 million inhabitants of Burmah and the British Shan States. These latter at present take 3½ million pounds worth of Indian merchandise and 2½ million pounds worth from Great Britain. On such a basis the 112 million people neighbouring Burmah should take 44 million pounds worth of British Indian produce and 31 million pounds worth of British manufactures if the cost of carriage in the country was facilitated and cheapened as it has been in Burmah. It is folly to talk of british manufactures if the cost of carriage in the country was facilitated and cheapened as it has been in Burmah. It is folly to talk of a country being not worth opening out because, owing to the absence of cheap means of communication, it does not produce more than is required for its local market. This is the case all over the world—what inducement is there for a man to produce or manufacture more than he requires for his own and his family's use if he can find no provide for its local market. mark for it?

The Russian Government has issued orders for the construction of twenty new vessels destined for the navigation of the Caspian. The displacement will vary between 500 and 1,000 tons, the cost between 100,000 and 150,000 roubles. Some of the vessels are to be built in Russia, others in England and Sweden.

Russia, others in England and Sweden.

The appointment of Colonel King-Harman, R.A., to be Chief Inspector of Small Arms, marks the introduction of the new system which Lord Morley's Committee on the Army Manufacturing Departments recommended, under which the inspection of military stores is to be entrusted to independent officers. Up till now the Government manufacturer has inspected and passed in the Service his own productions. He has also been the inspector of goods supplied by the trade. This has naturally led to dissatisfaction on the part of contractors, who have declared, rightly or wrongly, that while the Government manufacturer was leniently disposed towards his own goods, he was unduly particular about other people's. unduly particular about other people's.

Miscellaneous.

The total decrease shown in the Army and Na7y Estimates for 1888-89, as compared with 1887-88, is £1,057,600.

Captain Francis Durrant, of Her Majesty's ship Ajax, has been awarded a Good Service Pension of £150.

Truth says in reference to the fact of Captain Fellowes, R.N., having quitted the Duke of Edinburgh's flagship, the reason has been assigned that certain alterations in the evolutions of the squadron were ordered by H.R.H. the Admiral, but met with objections. Captain Fellowes was directed to find out privately by H.R.H. who was originating the opposition. The private work was a breach of naval etiquette and courtesy, and Captain Bridge, the officer accused, demanded an apology. H.R.H. directed Captain Fellowes to give one, but the latter applied to be superseded rather than apologise for obeying his admiral's orders.

The German Army is comparatively weak in cavalry, counting on its war footing but 600 squadrons, making 3,300 officers and 112,000 sabres (exclusive of non-combatants); while that of Austria-Hungary is less numerous than the German force. In fact, Russia alone, by calling upon her cavalry in Asia, can at once place in line of battle a cavalry force equal to that of Germany and Austria-Hungary combined. In infantry and artillery the Austria-German Armies are far superior to Russia. In case of war, cavalry, beyond all doubt, will play a more than ever important rôle.

a more than ever important rôle.

The Polyphemus is, in proportion to her size, by far the most costly vessel that has ever formed part of the British Navy. Being a mastess ship, she has to depend entirely when she is at sea upon her engines to enable her to reach port. After making the short passage from Sicily, she entered Valetta Harbour with barely a ton of coal on board. Had she been delayed by a little bad weather or by the slightest accident, she would have been unable to get to her destination, and might have rolled and drifted helplessly for days, even if no worse had happened to her. She could have filled her bunkers at Sicily, but an Admiralty order that exists prevented her doing so, and nearly rendered this immense ship worse than useless.

According to a correspondent at Odessa, the formidable massing of Russian troops on the Western Frontier still continues. Merchants experience much difficulty in having their goods forwarded by the South-Western and by the St. Petersburg-Warsaw Railways. The movements of troops towards Bialostock, Brest-Litovski, and the Galician frontier have brought all the spare wagons into requisition, and it is next to impossible to have merchandise transmitted in the western parts of Russia with any degree of promptitude. The garrisons in Bessarabia are also being strengthened; large reinforcements have been sent to Bender and Kischenev. The Russian authorities and newspapers are anxious to explain that military movements on the western frontier are at present quiescent. on the western frontier are at present quiescent.

A correspondent of the United Service Gazette, in commenting on the A correspondent of the United Service Gazette, in commenting on the loss of H.M.S. Wasp, alleges that the presumed catastrophe was due to defective engines, and says: There are also two causes. One is cheap contract, and the other the fear officers in charge of the engines have of "getting a bad name" if they do not make the best of everything. Take a sister ship to the Wasp, the Rattler, and, if you can get a copy of her log, print in your columns the number of times she "stopped for repairs on her way out." This is no called "breaking down" officially; but if it happened in a typhoon, or on a lee shore, it would certainly be a case of going officially to the bottom. The remedy is so simple, it seems almost childish to write it. Do not let a firm throw a lot of old iron and brass down the engine-room hatch, and call the debris engines because it saves a thousand pounds, but go to the P. and debris engines because it saves a thousand pounds, but go to the P. and debris engines because it saves a thousand pounds, but go to the P. and O., or any of our large ocean-going merchant steamer owners, and find out who engines their ship, and let them have the contract. Look at the thousands of miles these steamers go without stopping their engines, and try and find out how many of our sloops, gun-vessels, and gun boats have steamed a thousand miles without breaking down, or, in official parlance, stopping to screw up, or hot bearings, etc. Print this report in your columns, and, further, get their Lordships to issue a memo. that every stoppage for repairs under steam is to be specially reported on a separate report to the Secretary of the Admiralty, and not filtered through the Inspector of Machinery Department, for they will cry stinking fish, having previously passed the engines into the Service, and reported favourably on them at what is misnamed a trial trip. trip.

A correspondent, signing himself "R.," writes to the St. James's Gazette on the miraculous increase of the navy. He says:—The British public do not seem to have become aware of the good fortune which has recently befallen them. It is no less than this: since the end of has recently befallen them. It is no less than this: since the end of last year their navy has in a marvellous manner become increased by upwards of 13,000 tons. This augmentation of the naval force has nothing whatever to do with some 45,000 tons of shipping which the Admiralty have lately ordered to be laid down in the dockyards; the tonage to which I refer is afloat, or nearly all of it. You may well ask where and how did I find it out? Why, in the official list of the navy, to be sure. I turned over the pages, when—imagine my surprise—I noticed that every one of the 5,000-ton belted cruisers had grown in displacement 600 tons. It struck me that it must be a misprint; so I sent for another Navy List and then one of last month, and compared them together. The result of my investigation was, as I have told you: the navy afloat had increased by 13,230 tons in less than two months. That is to say, it would have done so, I suppose, if (greater marvel still) two vessels, the Impérieuse and Warspite, had not decreased 100 tons each in the same period. I fancy they have ost this amount in weight owing to the abuse they received a short time ago telling on their constitutions. I am confirmed in my opinion by an investigation of the tonnage of the Porpoise and her sister vessels. I have seen in your pages strictures on the Porpoise: unwittingly you I have seen in your pages strictures on the Porpoise: unwittingly you have, I fear, done the poor thing harm; for while each of her sisters has increased in weight by 150 tons, she has not been able to put on so much as a pound. Curiously enough, the sisters of the unfortunate Wasp have all advanced forty-five tons. Ships out in China, like the Alacrity, Leander, and Rattler, are affected by the amazing change—but not equally. For example, of the two vessels, the Alacrity and Surprise, which up to now have been credited with the same displacement, 1,600 tons, the former has risen to 1,700, while the latter has only got to 1,650. Having pointed out what has happened, I leave it to others to explain the extraordinary phenomenon.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE CF INDIA.

THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE CF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do juatice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are centradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bondal) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compondium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound; interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian emple.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with case and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are ma unally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grivances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Pullament and other public mon desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Etatesman, October 1886.

.... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 28 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Scn e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India,

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout ts career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineter Review.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE ESTABLISHED 1888

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Sorvices. Articles on specially inter sting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an oppertunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is officed by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"Mr. Bagot has written a capital little book, which every gunner and yachtsman, if not every sportsman should read. The reader, even if he has never seen the sea, becomes an enthusiastic saller before he has read a couple of chapters, and he is then taken in the most entertaining manner nearly all round the Meditorraneam."—Land and Water.

"The author of this brightly-written book, being a practised sportsman, is enabled to p esent the reader with a work not only interesting from a yacht-man's point of view, but really valuable as conveying the reads of dearly-bought experience."—Morning Post.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 24th February; from Allahabad and Madras to the 22nd February; and from Calcutta to the 21st February.

THE Supreme Legislative Council met at Calcutta on Police Population Rill was passed: Feb. 17th, when the Police Regulation Bill was passed; the Hon. Mr. Westland introduced a Bill to prohibit the making or issuing by private persons of pieces of metal for use as money, and also the making of coins resembling those of foreign States; the Hon. Mr. Scoble presented the Report of the Select Committee on the Patents Bill; and General Chesney obtained leave to introduce a Bill to regulate Her Majesty's Indian Reserve Forces.

THE Budget will be published on March 24th or 26th. Mr. Westland, it is said, will probably confine himself to facts and explanations, omitting disquisitions.

THE Bengal Legislative Council met at Calcutta on Feb. 18th, and the Calcutta Municipal Bill again came under discussion.

LORD AND LADY DUFFERIN and family were to go to Darjeeling on the 2nd of March, returning to Calcutta on According to present arrangements the Viceroy will not leave Calcutta till about the 27th of March; and it has been finally settled that his Excellency will pay a visit to Lucknow, after a few days shooting at Rewah, travelling probably by the Benares route. He will then proceed to Srinagar via Murree, the recent presence of cholera at Jammu rendering that route unadvisable.

In the course of the past week the Commander-in-Chief has visited Delhi, where his Excellency inspected the troops, and visited places of interest. He left on Monday, Feb. 20th, for Meerut, where he arrived the same evening.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the N.W. Provinces has proceeded to Rai Bareilly, where his Honour was to hold a durbar. He returns to Lucknow afterwards, and leaves again early next month to visit the headquarters of the only two divisions he has not yet seen since taking office. Leaving Lucknow on the night of the 6th of March he will reach Meerut the next day, and remain until the 10th, arriving the next day at Jhansi, where a two days' stay will be made. From Jhansi Sir Auckland Colvin goes down to Calcutta for three days, leaving again on the evening of the 18th, and returning to Lucknow on the

THE Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal was to leave Calcutta on the 2nd of March for a tour in Chota Nagpur. Sir Steuart Bayley will probably not go to Darjeeling until the middle of May, as the Calcutta Municipal Bill has to be first disposed of.

THE Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces has gone to Calcutta.

Mr. H. M. DURAND, the Foreign Secretary to the Government of India, is now on his way back to India from leave; but he purposes breaking his journey at Aden, and will visit Zailah, Berbera, and other important points on the Somali coast.

PRINCE BERNHARD OF SAXE-WEIMAR reached Calcutta on February 19th. He is the guest of the Viceroy. The Duc d'Orléans, who comes to complete his military education in this country, is also staying at Government

SIR LEPPOC CAPPELL leaves India by this mail, when Colonel Mallock officiates as Director-General of the Telegraph.

COLONEL LAW, Political Agent in Bikanir, goes to Dehra in charge of Yakub Khan on being relieved by Major Talbot next month.

DR- SWEENY becomes Civil Surgeon of Aligarh when Dr. Ellis takes leave, which he will shortly.

THE Amir intends remaining at Jellalabad until the spring has well set in. The climate there is milder than at Kabul, and he has administrative as well as military business to attend to.

AYUB KHAN is expected to arrive in India in April. He will be sent to reside in the Pindi district.

THE Viceroy's thanks have been conveyed to H.H. the Nawab of Bahawalpur for his loyal offer to place the resources of his State and the services of his troops at the disposal of the Government of India in connection with the defences of the North-West Frontier.

THE latest news from the Chittagong Hill Tracts shows no restlessness among the tribes across the border. It is now evident that it was some stray band that killed the ill-fated Lieutenant Stewart.

Mr. Paul and Mr. Bernard returned from Guntur Feb. 20, after having an interview with the Raja of Sikkim. The Raja appears utterly callous of advice, and there are indications that his influence amongst his people is on the decline.

It is now definitely settled that the Agricultural Conference at Delhi will be held between March 29 and April The main subject of discussion will be the means and method of establishing civil veterinary departments.

THE Indo-European Telegraph Department was brought under the Director-General of Telegraphs in India, with effect from Feb. 15.

MR. BARBOUR will not return to India till July at the earliest.

MR. GUILDFORD MOLESWORTH proceeds shortly to Burma to inspect the progress of the Toongoo-Mandalay Railway.

SIR CHARLES ELLIOTT after the production of the Budget will make a tour southwards, visiting on his journey the works of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company.

It is probable that a deputy will shortly be appointed to the office of Financial Secretary to the Government of

AT a meeting held at Calcutta it was decided to place a memorial portrait of Mr. Turnbull, late Secretary to the Corporation, in the Town Hall. An influential committee was formed to carry out this decision.

SYED GOOL SYED KHAIRULLAKHAN, who was sentenced to death at the Criminal Sessions for the murder of his wife, Shariffa Khatoon, was to be executed in front of the county jail on Saturday morning, the 3rd March.

It is stated that from April next the office of Advocate-General will be abolished in Bombay and Madras, the Finance Committee having recommended its amalgama. tion with the post of Romembrancer of Legal Affairs.

THE Government of India having desired that the question of compulsory retirement from the Bengal Pilot Service raised by Mr. Daly's case should be considered in connection with the redistribution of tonnage it has been referred to the committee that has just been appointed.

THE LORD BISHOP OF CALCUTTA was to leave Calcutta for England on the 9th March, and will be absent for about eight months. His lordship's immediate object in visiting England is to represent India at the Pan-Anglican Synon, which will assemble at Lambeth Palace.

ANOTHER Parsee Cricket team is after all going to England, and the members have already engaged passages by the Austro-Lloyd's steamship Poseidon, leaving Bombay on the 7th May next.

THE net gain in the working of the Registration Department for the past year was Rs. 32,963.

THE forecast for the late cotton crops in the Bombay Presidency show that the area sown is 4,560,752 acres, a slight increase on last year.

THE out turn for the British districts is estimated at 336.818 bales.

THE net Indian sea and land customs revenue, exclusive of the salt revenue for the first ten months of the current financial year, has amounted to Rs. 83,30,000, as compared with Rs, 81,69,000 during the corresponding period of last year.

NOTES.

The Times correspondent telegraphs from Calcutta that "the news of the death of the great Kaiser has created a profound sensation in India, and has dwarfed into insignificance all other topics of less immediate interest. The leading Calcutta newspaper pays an eloquent tribute to the private virtues and heroic qualities of the illustrious Emperor, and rightly interprets the universal feelings of admiration, regret, and sympathy which his noble character and the mournful intelligence of his death have excited in the public mind in India."

This is all very good, and what was, of course, to be expected. The Anglo-Indian Press was not likely to be behind its European contemporaries in expressions of regret and sympathy regarding the loss which Germany has sustained in the death of her great Emperor; but why the correspondent should wire part of a leader from the Englishman on the subject must be a puzzle to all but himself. As every newspaper in Great Britain, from Land's End to John O'Groat's, has already had leaders on the sad subject, to telegraph one from Calcutta seems a little superfluous, especially as all other news from India appears to have been excluded to make room for it.

The Indian editor whose aphorisms have thus been chonoured ought to feel flattered, but the action of the correspondent will be a misfortune if it leads our worthy confrères on the Press in the East to think that their atterances on European topics are looked forward to with interest at home. Those who, like ourselves, have to wade weekly through files of what are called the "Overland" editions of Anglo-Indian newspapers know how distressing it is, when searching for some valuable information or opinions regarding India itself, to come upon long and dreary platitudes about home or European politics. If the editors would only be as terse and as comprehensive at the same time as the late John Lang in his celebrated deader on the Gorham case all would be forgiven to them; but, alas! the spirit of John Lang, so far as wit and the soul of wit are concerned, does not appear to haunt the reditorial sanctums of India to-day.

But the desire to instruct home readers on home or Continental politics has always been a strong one in the breast of the Anglo-Indian editor. Some Anglo-Indians here may still recollect how the Editor of a very small print in one of the hill stations one morning startled its readers with the announcement: "We have at length discovered a clue to the infamous designs of the Emperor (Louis Napoleon), and it is our intention shortly to expose him to the world!" But this was bright and pleasant reading, and showed a confidence in oneself that was refreshing. But the hand which penned that sparkling paragraph has long been stilled in the eternal silences.

HOWEVER, it is better to read Anglo-Indian criticisms on European affairs than to peruse some of the effusions of the English Press on Indian and Anglo-Indian topics. For instance, it is not pleasant to read the opinion of an organ of the London Peace Society that British troops in Upper Burma are sent to murder villagers in their beds asleep, and the following paragraph can hardly be said to give a true insight into British character or be accepted as a model of journalistic truthfulness: — "There is something utterly repulsive and humiliating in these expeditions of vengeance, in which our countrymen indulge, in all parts of the world, at the mere impulse of their own cruelty or caprice. No attempt is ever made to identify the actual offenders concerned, in any outrage we undertake to avenge. The ravages we commit are wholesale and indiscriminate. The instructions given and acted upon seem to be—"Kill, and burn, and devastate on a sufficiently large scale, and we may hope the guilty parties will be among those who are punished or destroyed."

THE Native Press also gives its opinion on European subjects. Here is what a vernacular paper says of the English girls of the period:—"The women in these days are not goddesses but stuffings of fashion. Everything is false in them—we mean Europeans. Their cheeks are coloured, their eyebrows pointed; their ears or sittings are extended by wires, their maternal reservoirs are made and not natural, and their waists are screwed in by tight lacing. We are sorry to say all this, but truth demands plain speaking."

SIR FRANK SOUTER, the Bombay Police Commissioner, has been asked a legal conundrum by Major Tucker, of the Salvation Army, which has been submitted to the lawyers for consideration. The Army is prohibited under the Police regulations from playing drums, tom-toms, and brass instruments through the streets, save only on the Esplanade. This is a hardship to the Salvation Army, which has to march in inglorious silence to the Esplanade before the music strikes up, and it is a deprivation to the people of the city, who press the musicians for music, and take unkindly the refusal to comply with the request for a little harmony. Major Tucker's point of law is this, that a tambourine is not a drum nor a tom-tom, and an accordeon is not a brass instrument. Sir Frank Souter declining to commit himself to an answer as to whether he would regard a band of tambourine and accordeon players as coming within the meshes of the law a legal opinion has been obtained, which sets forth that a tambourine is a modification of the drum, and an accordeon is a metal instrument, and therefore a band composed of those two instruments would come within the scope of the police order. Major Tucker is going to appeal.

Here is another "military grievance" which has found its way into the Press:—"If the authorities fancy the Burma medal business does not interest the soldiers, or that so long as a mark of distinction is given, its fashion and form matter nothing, they are wofully mistaken. An irate sergeant writes to a contemporary that when the medal was distributed to his battalion the other day many of the men who were already in possession of the Afghan medal immediately began to institute comparisons, and the result was anything but favourable to the new decoration. Errors in regimental numbers, rank, and the like are numerous; many of the medals are malformed, and style and finish are inferior. Our correspondent even notices that while the Afghan medals were presented in a neat cardboard box, those now given out were 'in small envelopes made of waste paper.' As a last grievance it appears that the allowance of medal ribbon is one incushorter."

It is already known that there is a great deficiency in the supply of horses wanted for cavalry and artillery purposes in India. A correspondent writes to the Times that a large proportion of the Government bullocks in that country are totally unfit for active military purposes, and it now appears that there is likely to be a decrease amongst the mules. This is said to be owing to a new head-stall which has just been adopted for those animals. Major Patch, Commissary-General, and Mr. Oliphant Veterinary Surgeon, found during an inspection tour that this new invention, "when not injuring the mule's nose, injures his chin, and sometimes by way of a change enables his rider to hang him." Of course nobody else is likely to be hanged for this.

THE Punjah has been often boasted of by its civil and military administrators as being the model Province of India, but, if the following from an Indian contemporary be true, the capital of the province seems to be a little short of perfection:—"We must go back several years to find anything in India to equal the rapine and lawlessuess that obtains in Lahore at present. Hardly a day passes without some crime being attempted or committed with impunity, and it is safe to say that the supineness and imbecility of the police have seldom been equalled and never excelled. Europeans are commencing to put revolvers under their pillows, and the sampling of a thief or two as corpses will doubtless have an excellent effect. Lahore may be aptly compared to Gwalior as regards the bands of criminals that rampage round just in the old sweet way."

It is said that a fine trade in camels has sprung up between Kurrachee and Adelaide, whole steamer-loads of these useful animals being annually shipped to the latter port. The trade realists enormous profits, as much as £20 on each animal. At present a few Afghans and Pathans go over in companies, taking these animals with

THE Pioneer has a very sensible recommendation to the effect that the Government of India should grant rewards for the study of the Chinese language. It now does so for the study of the Shan language, but, as the Allahabad journal points out, with the Indian Empire extending eastward, the study of Chinese becomes a necessity, and should be encouraged by the grant of a moonshee allowance.

THE Rangoon Times thinks there are signs, in spite of the constant greanings heard from all sorts and conditions of men, in spite of a rice crop which has not turned out well, and a certainty of scarcity of food in some parts of the province, and in spite of the discontent which the raising of the salt duties and the prospect of an Income-tax have brought about, of a revival of trade in Burma. From all up-country correspondents it hears of large quantities of produce of all kinds lying on the banks awaiting shipment, for which their owners are unable to get carriage, owing partly to the low state of the river and partly to the fact that the present fleet engaged on the Irrawaddy is altogether insufficient for both Government requirements and private trade, when the latter is at all brisk. It thinks, then, in spite of the drawbacks mentioned, that there are more hopeful signs for the revival of trade and restoration of prosperity in Burma now than we have had for some years past, and that, at the end of the present dry season, the pacification of the whole of the apper country will have still have further brightened up the general aspect of affairs.

Death of Mr. Ardeseer Cursetjee Furdoonjee.—We Times of India) regret to announce the death of Mr. Ardeseer Cursetjee Furdoonjee Parukh, which occurred on Wednesday evening, Feb. 22, at his father's residence in Hornby Road, Fort. Deceased was the only son of Mr. Cursetjee Furdoonjee Parukh, who is one of the leading members of the Parsee community; and for a long time past he has been suffering from dropsy. He was up to the time of his death the Secretary of the Bombay United Spinning and Weaving Mills. During the Share Mania in 1863 and 1864 he was one of the leading Native cotton merchants of Bombay. He was a very shrewd business man, and his advice was frequently sought with reference to many important and difficult mercantile transactions. Mr. Ardeseer also took an active part in the welfare of the Parsees, by whom he was highly respected. He was a man of a wery genial disposition, and by his death the Parsee community have lost a worthy leader, and the Native merchants a valued friend and adviser. He was about 47 years of age.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 11. As a contribution towards the defences of the Empire, the Maharajah of Cashmere has offered £100,000, the whole of his war material, and the services of himself and his troops.

AFGHANISTAN.

It is rumoured that the Ameer of Afghanistan contemplates the sending of a force against the Siahposh Kafirs. The Ghilzai revolt appears to have been completely crushed. The Ameer has endeavoured, but hitherto unsuccessfully, to induce the Orakzais, Afridis, and Shinwaris to visit him.

to discuss the political situation at a personal interview. The Phodong Lama, however, who has acted as one of the two administrators of Sikkim during the Rajah's absence, had a meeting with the Viceroy on Wednesday. He states that the people of Sikkim seek British protection against Thibetan aggression. The Tibetans are said to be endeavouring to collect levies in the Chumbi Valley.

Colonel Graham has arrived at Padong and taken over charge of the expeditionary force. The 13th Native Infantry left Allahabad on Tuesday for the front.

The fort erected at Lingtu, right across our trade route, and garrisoned by Tibetan soldiers, is said to consist of a stone wall 12ft. high and 4ft. thick, with bastions at either end. The trade road runs through the gateway in the fort wall. It is possible that hostilities may yet be averted, as the Chinese Government has recalled its Resident from Lhassa, as a mark of Imperial displeasure at his failure to withdraw the Tibetan troops from Lingtu.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE HOME CHARGES. (Statesman.)

(Statesman.)

We have lived forty years in India, and with the single exception of Samuel Laing's outspoken convictions of the true state of matters, we cannot recal a single protest of any kind by the Supreme Government, against the exactions of the English treasury. Does any man living believe that this failure arises from the fact that these exactions have been of so conspicuously rightful an order, that it was improper to question them. As a fact, they have been, and are, a scandal to the nation, while Viceroy after Vioeroy, and Finance Ministers without number, have never opened their lips upon the subject. We have a sincere liking and respect for Lord Dufferin, as a most genial and generous-minded man, who desires to govern India so gently, and with such graceful tact, as to reconcile the country even to the financial relations between the two countries as they are known by ourselves, the facts would keep him tossing upon his bed at night, until he had delivered his soul about them. We have been all-powerful, and have used our power without a scruple. And what India wants is the Viceroy or Finance Minister, who is willing, if need be, to sacrifice himself, if he can but awaken the conscience of the nation to what she is really doing in Iudia. There is so little hope of such a man arising amongst us that we welcome these Congresses as a necessity. Let the people be but prudent and moderate, and abstain from all agitation but that what the force of reason elicits, and England herself There is so little hope of such a man arising amongst us that we welcome these Congresses as a necessity. Let the people be but prudent and moderate, and abstain from all agitation but that what the force of reason elicits, and England herself will awaken to the dishonour of the wealthiest nation in the world, robbing the very poorest of their resources, until untold millions of their number never know what it is to have a full meal. They rise hungry to toil in their fields, and go hungry to their beds at night, that England may indulge in the luxury of aggressive wars for which they are made to pay. In 1866 we went to great labour to show what the palpably wrongful exactions of the mother-country had amounted to, and found that a few great items alone aggregated 500 crores of rupees. exactions of the mother-country had amounted to, and found that a few great items alone aggregated 500 crores of rupees. The evil has grown steadily upon us, since the Crown assumed the direct government of the country; and as our Viceroys and Finance Ministers fail even to remonstrate upon the subject, there is nothing left the people, but to demand "representative" government of some kind or other, that will meet the evil, by awakening the conscience of the English people to the wrong.

SIND AND THE PUNJAB.

(Pioneer.)

We are glad to learn that the question of handing over Sind to the Punjab Government is once more under consideration, and that there is a prospect of the question being finally settled this time. The arguments in favour of the change have been repeated so often that we need not enter into details regarding them. The present system of administration in Sind differs in many points from that in Bombay, and it could readily be assimilated with that of the Punjab; while a want of unity must always exist when part of our frontier troops are under the Commander-in-Chief in India and part under the Commander in Chief in Parkey. are under the Commander-in-Chief in India and part under the Commander-in-Chief in Bombay. The weakness of the latter arrangement has been patent to all military observers for years: no other great European Power situated as England is in India would tolerate it for a day, for unity of control among forces lying on a possibly hostile border is one of the first principles which all strategists insist upon. The divided authority which exists in the long stretch of country from the sea at Karachi northwards to the Punjab was due originally to the want of communications, but the Indus Valley and frontier railway systems have done away with this, and troops can be moved from point to point as rapidly as in any part of India. In case of extended operations in Afghanistan, Karachi would become the sea-base, and its importance in this respect is universally recognised. The work which would then have to be done in the port in connection with field operations have to be done in the port in connection with field operations at the front would be simplified in every way if one authority were supreme all along the border line. The commercial aspect of the question is familiar enough; the good people of Karachi look upon Bombay as a jealous rival who will grant them nothing and will hamper them on every occasion, whereas the Punjab is deeply interested in promoting the welfare of its only natural seaport. If Bombay loses Sind it will probably look for compensation elsewhere, and this it may not be impossible to give in the Direction of the Central Provinces. In any case, the whole question is now being threshed out, and the issue, we hope, will be in favour of transferring Sind to new masters.

DENSITY OF POPULATION IN INDIA. (Englishman.)

The extraordinary density of population in many parts of India, with its tendency to go on increasing, constitutes, more than the agitation of the educated classes for place and emolument, the most difficult problem concerning the future of India. From the statistics of 235 villages in the Muzafarpur district which have just been accurately compiled in connection with survey and settlement operations, it appears that 78 per cent. of the whole area is cultivated and 22 uncultivated, but of the latter 3 per cent. is rent-paying land under thatching grass, 5³ per cent. is under orchards, and 7 per cent. is unfit for cultivation, so that only 6⁴ per cent. of the entire area is left for pasture land. When it is remembered that the agricultural population of this tract, which does not include the town of Muzafarpur, is 824 souls to the square mile, and that this population increased 15 per cent. within the last decade, it will be seen how little room there is for extension of cultivation, and how great is the pressure on the resources of the soil.

THE SIKKIM DIFFICULTY.

(Pioneer.)

The action of the Government of India in ordering a Pioneer regiment into Sikkim to repair the bridge over the Rilli river regiment into Sikkim to repair the bridge over the Killi river must not be construed into an actual intention to begin hostilities with the Tibetans forthwith. The fact that the infantry are to be accompanied by two mountain guns may seem significant; but it must be remembered that the distance from the Rilli to Lingtu, where the Tibetans have a party of men holding their fortified post, is only some 20 miles by road, and that contingencies must consequently be guarded against. The Lamas have grown so arrogant through our forbearance that they may feel tempted, even at this season of the year, to place a considerable body of men at Lingtu, and even threaten our working parties. If they are foolish enough to do that, then hostilities will be forced upon us, and the Tibetans will be driven back into their own country as soon as a force can be get together to open the consistency. got together to operate against them. It is not intended to send British infantry at present; but precautions have been taken to have these ready to move at a few hours' notice if matters assume a serious aspect. The immediate object of moving some 700 or 800 men into Sikkim is to exert a moral moving some 700 or 800 men into Sikkim is to exert a moral effect both upon the Tibetans and the subjects of the Raja of Sikkim. They will see that the limit of forbearance on the part of the Government of India has been passed, and that preparations are being made to break down, once and for all, the influence which the Lamas have for some time past exerted in Sikkim affairs. The capture of the Lingtu fort, or breastwork as it really is, is only a minor point after all; the real object is a political one. If the present display of force is sufficient to induce the Tibetans to abandon Lingtu, and this is just possible, though we are not very sanguine on the point, is just possible, though we are not very sanguine on the point, then no expedition in the real meaning of the term will be needed. The Lamas will have admitted that they have no locus standi in the affairs of Sikkim, and the Raja of that State will doubtless show anxiety to fulfil his treaty obligations with India. The Sikkim people have no real desire to submit their fate to the Lhassa authorities: their representations the to Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling have proved this, and they cannot now he left in the lurch and they cannot now be left in the lurch.

THE GREAT CENSUS. [BY SMITH.]

Mowji was a mehter, but he was also a Punjabi, and conscquently, though in appearance something like a buffalo, had a head on his shoulders. Mowji was also my mehter—the property of Smith, who governs a vast population of servants with unprecedented success. When he was my subject I did not appreciate him properly. I called him lazy and unclean; I also protested against the multitude of his family. Mcwji asked for his dismissal—he was the only servant who ever voluntarily left the shadow of my protection—and I said: "O Mowji, either you are an irreclaimable ruffian or a singu "O Mowji, either you are an irreclaimable ruman or a singularly self-reliant man—in either case you will come to great grief; where do you intend to go?" "God knows," said Mowji, cheerfully. "I shall leave my wife and all the children here, and go somewhere else. If you, Sahib, turn them out they will die! For you are their only protector."

So I was dowered with Mowji's wife—wives rather, for le had forgotten the new one from Rawalpind, and Mowji went out to the unknown and proven single letter to his family. The out to the unknown, and never a single letter to his family. The wives used to clamour in the verandah and accuse me of having taken the remittances, which they said Mowji must have sent, to help out my own pay. When I supported them they were quite sure of the theft. For these reasons I was angry were quite sure of the their. For these reasons I was angry with the absent Mowji.

Time passed, and I, the great Smith, went abroad on travels and left my empire in commission. The wives were the feudatory Native States; but the commission could not make them recognize any feudal tie. They both got married, saying that Mowji was a bad man; but they never left the com

In the course of my wanderings I came to the great Native State of Ghorahpur, which, as every one knows, is on the borders of the Indian Desert. None the less, it requires almost as many printed forms for its proper administration as a real district. Among its other peculiarities, it was proud of its prisoners—kaidis they were called, which may or may not be a conception of dakaity as Doctor Sir W. Hunter spells it. In the old days Ghorahpur was wont to run its dacoits through the stomach or cut them with swords; but now it prides itself on keeping them in leg irons and employing them cn "remunerative labour"; that is to say, sitting in the sun by the side of a kutcha road and waiting until some road-metal comes and lays itself down.

A gang of kaidis was hard at work in this fashion when I came by, and the warder was picking his teeth with the end of his bayonet. One of the fettered sinners came foward and salaamed deeply to me. It was Mowji.—fat, well fed, and with a twinkle in his eye. "Is the Presence in good health, and are all in his house well?" said Mowjii. "What in the world are you doing here?" demanded the Presence. "By your honour's favour I am in prison," said he, delicately shaking one leg to make the ankle iron jingle on the leg-bar. "I have been in prison nearly a month." "What for—dacoity?" "I have been a Sahib's servant," said Mowji, offended. "Do you think that I should ever become a jungle dacoit like these men here? I am in prison for making a numbering for the people."

"A what?" Mowji grinned, and told the tale of his misdeeds thus:— A gang of kaidis was hard at work in this fashion when I

"A what?" Mowji grinned, and told the tale of his misdeeds thus:—

"When I left your service, Sahib, I went to Delhi, and from Delhi I came to the Sambhur Salt Lake over there!" He pointed across the sand. "I was a Jemadar of Mohter's there, because these Marwarri people are without sense. Then they gave me leave, because they said that I had stolen money. It was true, but I was also very glad to go away, for my legs were sore from the salt of the Sambhur Lake. I went away and hired a camel for twenty rupees a month. That was shameful talk, but these thieves of Marwarris would not let me have it for less." "Where did you get the money from?" I asked. "I have said that I had stolen it. I am a poor ran. I could not get it any other way."

"But what did you want with a camel?" "The Sahib shall hear. In the Salt Sahib's house was a big book which come from Bombay, and whenever the Sahib wanted anything to eat or good tobacco he looked into the book and wrote a chit to Bombay, and in a week all the things came as he had ordered. I took that book; it was a fat one; and I shaved my moustache in the way of Mahonimedans, and I got upon my camel and went away from that had place of Samhhur.

"Where did you go?" "I cannot say. I went for four cay over the sand till I was very far from Sambhur. Then I came to a village and said :- 'I am Wajib Ali Bahadur, a servant of the Sirkar, and many men are wanted to go and fight in Cabul.

The order is written in this book. How many strong men have you? They were afraid because of my book, and because they were without sense. They gave me food, and all the headmen gave me rupees to spare the men in that village, and went away from there with nineteen rupees. The name of that village was Kot. And as I had done at Kot, so I did at other villages—Waka, Tung, Malair, Palan, Myokal, and other places—always getting rupees, that the names of the young men might not be written down. I went from Biganir to Jeysulmir till my book in which I looked to frighten the people, was nearly broken, and I got one thousand seven hundred a sight wrong the results and the people.

"All from a camel and a Treacher's Price List?" "I do not know the name of the book, but these people who had never seen any Sahib log, and were like buffaloes, were very frightened of me. But I tried to take my Takkus from a servant of this Raj, and he made a report, and they sent sowars, who caught me—me, and my little camel, and my book. Therefore I was sent to prison."

"Mowji," said I solemnly, "if this be true, you are a great man. When will you be out of prison?" "In one year I got three months for taking the Takkus, and one year for pretending to be a Mahommedan. But I may run away before. All these people are very stupid men." "My arms, Mowji," I said, "will be open to you when the term of your captivity is ended: you shall be my body-servant." "The Presence is my father and my mother," said Mowji, "I will come." "The wives have married, Mowji," I said.

No matter," said Mowji; "I also have a wife at Sambhur and one here. When I return to the service of the Presence is my protection and a son of the gods,' said Mowji. "Without doubt I will come as soon as I can escape."

BENGAL.

THE Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces has gone to Calcutta.

A PROPOSAL, says the Englishman, comes from home for the construction of a new Howrah Bridge. The proposal re-places the present floating bridge by a mere permanent structure.

The recent visit of the Nepaulese Prime Minister passed off, the Englishman understands, without any reference to business. It might have been expected that the Maharajah would have raised the question of the refugees' place of residence—a question involving large monetary considerations—but in the official interviews he confined himself to lavish expressions of lovalty.

Mr. S. S. Jones, Officiating Magistrate, Puri, near Calcutta, has come to a tragical end. The deceased was found in his nightdress with his throat cut. The circumstances point to suicide; although a man of genial temperament, it is believed that lately he has been depressed on account of the recent death of a friend. He joined the Civil Service in 1873. Great sympathy is felt for his wife and family, who are now at Murshedabad.

Mr. Guilford Molesworth has reached Calcutta after a MR. GULFORD MOLESWORTH has reached Calcutta after a tour in Upper India. He proceeds shortly to Burma to examine the progress made with the Toungoo Mandalay Railway. This line has been so rapidly pushed on that the first engine is expected to be got through within two months from the present time. Regular traffic will, of course, not be possible until next cold weather, as the earthwork must be allowed to settle during the rains. The line will be one of the most quickly built on record in India. quickly built on record in India.

In regard to the question of railway connection between Bengal and our new territory in Burma, it is stated that Government is already moving. The Bengal Central Railway will carry out surveys eastwrads from near Jessore through Narail; and it is hoped that, in view of the importance of a separate connection by the land with Burma, the Assam-Chittagong project will not be lost sight of. The proposed line of the Bengal Central Railway will help to secure our provinces against anxiety from famines, when the vast rice supply of Eastern Bengal is thus directly within reach of railway transport, and the immense rice and jute trade from these districts will also be served more rapidly and safely than at present. at present.

The Englishman mentions that it is stated in one or two Native papers that the retail dealers in salt have taken advantage of the increased salt duty to raise the price of salt by as much as 100 per cent. One paper naively remarks that, had such a thing occurred in a Native State, the salt dealers would have been summoned to the cutcherry of the ruler and summarily punished. The writer suggests that as such summary justice cannot be expected under the British Government, shopkeepers should be warned by beat of drum not to sell salt at an improper price, but he does not say what is to happen if the sellers do not obey the proclamation.

Some news has been received of the doings of the survey Some news has been received of the doings of the survey and exploration party that is at work beyond the Eastern Assam frontier. Captain Michell, writing from Camp Hamyon on Jan. 23 states that he had to cut a path for 4,500 yards through the jungle. The country is uninhabited. A road or railway is feasible, but the climate is the greatest obstacle, as the country is a vast fever jungle. Mr. Needham had joined Captain Michell from Assam. Food was scarce, and might be the cause of the party returning. All the Singpho Nagas on the proposed route of communication have been forbidden by their chiefs to help the party with supplies or labour, and by this time they may be well on the way back to Debrugarh. to Debrugarh.

THE Englishman hears that a powerful syndicate has been formed in Calcutta for the purpose of operating for a rise in the gunny-bag market. It is headed by two well-known local capitalists, and includes several wealthy Natives. Purchases of gunny-bags on a large scale have already been made by brokers entrusted with the conduct of the venture. Since the jute mills have been working on short time, transactions of this kind have so increased that speculators virtually control the market for ready jute goods, and have, in a great measure, taken the place of the mills in supplying consumers. The danger lurking in such an anomalous situation is fully recognised by the Jute Manufacturers' Association, which recently found it advisable to raise the prices of certain goods in a dull market in order to support speculators who had been unable to dispose profitably of their purchases. The operations of the syndicate will, of course, be directed to securing, by its financial strength, results even more favourable than have been attained of late by the independent action of smaller speculators.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

A TERRIBLE murder, accompanied with arson, has been perpetrated not far from Delhi, and a special police officer has been sent out to investigate the case. It appears that the murdered man is a landowner and a cultivator in a small way. He is supposed to have been cut down or stabbed, the body being subsequently burnt. The murderers next burnt down the man's house and property, and his cattle were thrown into and allowed to perish in the general configgration. As the whole village must have witnessed the ghastly outrage, there appears every likelihood of the miscreants being brought to

AT a meeting of the Senate of the Allahabad University the proposed regulations for the studies in Arts were passed en bloc. This apparently inadequate treatment of the important subject is explained, says the Pioneer, by the fact that the Committee which drew them up consisted practically of every Fellow who wished to discuss them. Their appearance has been awaited with anxious expectancy by all members of the public interested in advention. public interested in education. A most erroneous suspicion had got afloat that the intention of Government was to follow the example of the Punjab University in the orientalisation of studies. The Senate has been careful to guard against the least tendency in this direction. The standard of English education will, if anything, be raised. The general principle adopted has been to carry on the Calcutta system with as little break of continuity as possible. The only changes of importance are the following. The number of subjects in the Intermediate examination has been reduced from six to five, a change made with the intention of diminishing cram. Separate Honours courses in the B.A. have been abolished, Honours being given for proficiency in the Pass course, the object of this being to relieve the overburdened staffs of the colleges. The M.A. degree has been placed two years after the B.A. for Pass students, and one year for Honours students, residence in college for one year being demanded in both cases. And a movement towards greater specialisation has been made in the Pass ourse, in Facility. the B.A. by allowing a student to take his degree in English and Mathematics alone. It remains now for the educational experts in this province to prove their mettle by working heart and soul in establishing the new University on a solid basis, and in securing for its degrees the reputation of being the best in India.

THE PUNJAB UNIVERSITY.—At a meeting of the Syndicate of the Punjab University the following business was transacted:—The Preliminary Distribution of the Budget of 1888 was ordered to be printed with slight changes. Mr. Rattigan, the Vice-Chancellor, generously promised to continue the Sanscrit Scholarship, hitherto given by Bishop French. It was decided to address Municipalities with the object of retaining the gratuitous services of the Head Master of Municipal Schools as Superintendent of Examinations for the University. ISLAM.

[By Elianus.]

There are zealous persons who, nevertheless, do harm to There are zealous persons who, nevertheless, do narm to Christianity; and there are well-meaning enthusiasts who are in the same position as regards Islam. The moral of this is, that our best friends are a source of danger if indiscreet and uninstructed. I have nothing particular to say against Islam, but I have against a bhisty's way of expounding to me its doctrines and boliefs. I say—to my shame—I know nothing of Islam, but have always thought of it in a spirit of toleration;

Islam, but have always thought of it in a spirit of toleration; but the bhisty, in advocating it, alienated my sympathies.

We had been speaking of that ever-interesting person—the devil, who, according to some anecdotes by the bhisty, occupied himself with rather trifling matters; and so I asked the bhisty if they couldn't keep the devil busy enough. "Not ve," replied the old bhisty, "ve are only too glad to sin without his exertions. He goes and disturbs difficult subjects, saints, and holy men, and fakirs, who are in danger of being lost to him. We are nobody to be tempted. The devil runs off ten paces on seeing us." "I trust you provide him punishment at last?" I asked hopefully. "Why not? On the last day he will claim all who have done wickedly; petitioning Allah that they should go with him. Allah will inquire 'Are they your creatures?' The devil will reply 'No, they are yours, but they have performed my works and obeyed my bidding in the world.' Then will Allah say, 'A crop grown on another's land may be cut and taken away, but not the land. So as you tempted these to sin you shall take their load of wickedness. land may be cut and taken away, but not the land. So as you tempted these to sin you shall take their load of wickedness upon yourself, but not them.' So," said the old bhisty in high glee, "he will be damned ten thousand times more than ever, and will have all the rage of seeing us escape him. That is all he will get for his pains. Ah! great is Allah."

A poor heart is the critics: it never rejoices. How I panted to share in the joy of the old bhisty in the gladness of putting the blame of oversize or expetter!

the blame of our sins on another!

His belief has a twofold advantage—it sanctions sinfulness and shields from punishment, which are pleasant conditions. Of course, we are all interested in making things more agreeable than we deserve, and in a scheme providing enjoyment in both worlds. It is natural to mankind; but perhaps the ordinary Mahomedan is most busy about the matter. At any rate, he has shown more ingenuity about it, having formulated a system of theology and religion which dispenses with merit, and holds out beatitude impartially to all. It is a plan which must be defective somewhere, and seems somewhat illogical and unfair. Besides, it brings the preacher, if pressed, into difficulties which he meets with offended looks and pity for difficulties. ignorance. But it is popular; it is the creed for the millior. People are glad to believe it to be faultless; because, if they co

People are glad to believe it to be faultless; because, if they conot believe it, they would have to brood upon their misdeeds and take to sackcloth and ashes, which is not so pleasant.

"Allah has made this world for our enjoyment. He wishes us to enter into worldly relations, which bring on sin in some way. But will he punish us therefore? Never. It is down what sins we will commit." "Then it is all right for the evildoers?" "True; and, therefore, in order that people may not be encouraged to further wickedness, we keep all these things covered," said the old bhisty, concealing the orifice of one fist with the other palm. "But you people rely on kismut when you go wrong?" "That is a mistake with the uneducated and ignorant. A man goes and steals something, gets lashes or ignorant. A man goes and steals something, gets lashes or prison; then returns and says 'My friends, it wasn't I. It was kismut.' You fool! could Allah put evil in your kismut? No; Allah desires everything good."

I was pleased with the repudiation of kismut, but the reason for it was getting confused with the previous statement, that for it was getting confused with the previous statement that we had an allotment of sins to perform. I was perplexed with the scheme of providing a hell, but no inmates; Divine anger against wickedness, but license to commit it; a heaven for the just, but to which evil-doers had equal claims. But though I take much satisfaction in the discomfiture of the devil, really take much satisfaction in the discomiture of the devil, really I feared his arguments here were pretty sound. Even if not so, it seems reasonable that the wicked should be punished without reference to anybody's polemic weakness. I was therefore dissatisfied with our long conference. Observing this, the old bhisty, who delighted to instruct in a breezy way and to be agreeably questioned, left me, after waiting long enough for payment; not obtaining which, he made it seem that I had beat him engaged from more important duties whereas he had kept him engaged from more important duties, whereas he had thrust his arguments upon me.

reacock, and Sir Richard Couch.)

These were three appeals and a cross appeal (consolidated by order of Her Majesty in Council) from a judgment of the Judicial Commissioner of Oude of March 27, 1886, reversing a decree of the District Judge of Fyzabad.

Sir Horace Davey, Q.C., Mr. Doyne, and Mr. C. W. Arathoon appeared for the Maharani Indar; Sir Charles Russell, Q.C., Mr. Rigby, Q.C., and Mr. Brook Little for Udit Narayan; and Mr. Finlay, Q.C., Mr. Mayne, and Mr. T. T. Forbes for the Maharani Jaipal.

The suit related to the succession to and management of the

The suit related to the succession to and management of the vast estates of the late Maharajah of Bulrampur, Sir Digbijai Singh, K.C.S.I. The appellant, the Maharani Indar, is his senior widow, and the respondent, the Maharani Jaipal, his junior widow. The other appellant, Udit Narayan, is the infant son adopted to the late Maharajah by the senior widow. The arguments were heard some time since and lasted several days, when their Lordships intimated that they would take time to consider their decision.

Lord Macnaghten, in now delivering the judgment of their Lordships, said the question in the appeals turned mainly on the construction and effect of the will of the late Maharajah Sir Digbijai Singh. The parties to the contest were his two widows and an infant adopted by the senior widow. The litigation was commenced by the junior widow, who challenged the validity of the adoption, and claimed joint proprietary possession of the immovable property and one-half share of the movable property of the late Maharajah, of which the senior widow had taken sole possession. The junior widow founded her claim on the contention that the expression "Maharani Sahiba" was used in the will as a collective term comprehending both widows. The senior widow maintained that it applied to her alone. The District Court held that the junior widow's claim was not well founded, and that she was only entitled to maintenance under the will. that she was only entitled to maintenance under the will. The Judicial Commissioner, on the other hand, held that the junior widow was included in the expression "Maharani Sahiba." He treated the adoption as valid, and held that the movables followed the raj, which was impartible; but he considered that the junior widow was entitled to equal beneficial enjoyment with the senior widow until the Government, should take action by assuming the management of the ment should take action by assuming the management of the estate in accordance with the request contained in the will. In the meantime the management was to remain in the hands of the senior widow. The conclusion of the Judicial Commissioner had not given satisfaction to any of the parties to the litigation. The senior widow and the adopted son had both appealed from the whole decree. Up to a certain point the case of the adopted son was the same as that of the senior widow. They differed only in their views as to the consequence of the adoption and the present rights conferred thereby—matters which could not come into question in the suit. The junior widow had also appealed from the decree so far as it held the adoption valid and the movables impartible, and so far as it committed the management of the estate to the senior widow. In order to construe the will it was necessary to understand the testator's position. The testator was one of the few Oude chieftains who remained loyal to the British Government during the troubles of 1857 and 1858. At that ment should take action by assuming the management of the remember during the troubles of 1857 and 1858. At that time he was Rajah of Bulrampur. His services were acknowledged by the Government. He was excepted by name from the proclamation which confiscated proprietary rights in the soil of Oude, and named first in the exception. He received the title of Maharajah and large grants of land, and he seemed to have been a parson of considerable invocation. and he seemed to have been a person of considerable importance. As president of the Oude Talookdars Association he took an active part in framing the Oude Estates Act, 1869, and he was also for a time a member of the Legislative Council of India. In 1860 the Maharajah married the Maharani Indar of India. In 1800 the Maharajan married the Maharani Indar Kunwar (the senior widow), and in 1877 he married the Maharani Jaipal. In 1878 he executed his will. His wives were then forty-one and nineteen years of age respectively. In May, 1882, he died, leaving his two wives surviving. He died without legitimate issue, and without having adopted a son in his lifetime. Their lordships went on to consider the testator's will, the scheme of which they thought was clear and consistent throughout. In the various contingencies which it contemplated the will showed no little thought and consideration, and there seemed to be a most anxious desire on the part of the Maharajah that the principle of succession which had prevailed in his family for generations—the rule of single heirship, or one owner at one time—should be maintained unimpaired. Turning to the passages of disputed meaning, the expression "Maharani Sahiba" occurred in connection with three different purposes which presented themselves to the testator's mind. "Maharani" signified the wife of a Maharajah, and "Sahiba" was Arabic for lady. Both words were in the singular number, but they were throughout used as governing verbs in the plural. The plural verb might properly have been used out of courtesy and as a mark of respect. It seemed to their lordships that all the passages in which the expression occurred almost irresistibly to the inference that one person occurred almost irresistibly to the inference that one person, and one person only, was intended by the designation "Maharani Sahiba" where the meaning was in dispute. That inference was strengthened by the passage in the will where the Maharani had a provided maintenance for his widows for there he had a residual provided maintenance for his widows for there he had a residual provided maintenance for his widows for there he had a residual provided maintenance for his widows for there he had a residual provided maintenance for his widows for there he had a residual provided maintenance for his widows for there he had a residual provided maintenance for his widows for there he had a residual provided maintenance for his widows for there he had a residual provided maintenance for his widows for there he had a residual provided maintenance for his widows for there he had a residual provided maintenance for his widows for there he had a residual provided maintenance for his widows for there he had a residual provided ma will, the scheme of which they thought was clear and conperson only, was intended by the designation "Maharani Sahiba" where the meaning was in dispute. That inference was strengthened by the passage in the will where the Maharajah provided maintenance for his widows, for there he used the expression "the two Maharani Sahiba." Their lordships found that in connection with the three purposes, succession to the estate, selection and adoption of an heir, and representation on an administrative council during the heir's minority in each of which a great noble in the testator's position in each of which a great noble in the testator's position might be expected to have in view only one person, he used the expression, "Maharani Sahiba" without qualification or addition; but in the two passages in which he must have had both his wives in view, in connection with the possibility of issue, and the usual provision for widowhood, he qualified the expression by other words which left no doubt as to his meaning. It was not disputed that if one person only was intended, that person must be the senior widow, who was for some years before the Maharajah's second marriage the only person entitled to the style and dignity of "Maharani Sahiba," and who after that marriage still retained the preminence of an elder wife. Their lordships proceeded to consider the question of the maintenance of the junior widow, which maintenance they thought should commence from the testator's death and should be payable out of the whole estate. Although their lordships held that the claim put forward by the junior widow was not well founded, and that the order of the Judicial Commissioner granting relief on the footing of that claim must be discharged, they thought it would be proper to make a declaration as to the allowance for maintenance to which they considered the inview widow not the proper will have relief and they will have resided cotts. allowance for maintenance to which they considered the junior widow entitled under the will. As regarded costs, the difficulty had been created by the testator himself, and in the circumstances, having regard to the position of the parties, their Lordships thought it right that the order of the Judicial Commissioner as to costs should not be disturbed, and that the costs incurred in the execution proceedings in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and the cost of all parties in these consolidated appeals should be paid as between solicitor and client out of the estate. Their Lordships would, therefore, humby advise Her Majesty that an order be made to the following effect:—To discharge the order of the Judicial Commissioner effect to the control of missioner, except so far as it provided for costs, and, in lieu of the decree of the District Court and of so much of the order of the Judicial Commissioner as was discharged, to declare that according to the true construction of the will the junior that according to the true construction of the will the junior widow was entitled only to an annuity during her life of 25,000 rupees, commencing from the day of the testator's death, and that such annuity was charged upon and payable out of the income of the entirety of the testator's estate. The costs incurred in the execution proceedings in the Judicial Commissioner's Court and of all parties in these consolidated appeals would be taxed as between solicitor and client and paid out of the estate. and paid out of the estate.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.--MARCH 6.

EAST INDIA (PURCHASE AND CONSTRUCTION OF RAILWAYS)

Sir J. Gorst, on rising to move the second reading of this Sir 3. Gorst, on Ising to move the second reading of this Bill, entered into a statement of its financial proposals. The Bill consisted of two parts—one enabling the Secretary of State to raise money for the purchase of the railway, and the other to enable the Secretary of State to borrow a sum of money which would be a guarantee to the company. It would be a proportion of the second reading of this second reading reading of this second reading of this second reading of this second reading of this second reading rea in fact, be a merely nominal transaction, but the effect would be to save the revenues of India to a considerable extent, as under the Bill the Secretary of State could borrow at a lower rate of interest. It was not intended to guarantee any new companies, and the purpose of the Bill was to enable matters to be managed more economically than at present. The last clause provided that the Secretary of State must lay before Parliament every year an account of the moneys raised and expended. The House would, therefore, be able to check the expenditure.

SIR G. CAMPBELL said that at the present stage he certainly should not oppose the first part of the Bill, relating to the purchase of the Oude and Rohilkund Railway, and his to the purchase of the Oude and Rohilkund Railway, and his objections to the second part were almost entirely removed by the assurance of the Under-Secretary that no fresh companies would be guaranteed. He objected strongly to the system of guaranteeing, for we were constantly buying up guaranteed railways at enormous premiums. He could not quite agree that money was likely to be saved by the arrangements set out in this measure. Guaranteed railways could at present raise money by debentures at 3½ per cent. The Under-Secretary said the Government could borrow and lend money at 3½ per cent, and that the difference between the two sums would be saved. Yet the Government had given a guarantee of 4 per cent, to certain railways with a share of the profits in of 4 per cent. to certain railways with a share of the profits in addition. In the circumstances, surely that was an extravagant proceeding. He feared that in the past guarantees had been given in consequence of the pressure put upon the Government by syndicates at home. The Executive ought to beware lest the result of any of their arrangements should be to make the railways dearer to purchase hereafter. He wished to express his most decided opinion that, situated as the Government was in India, with a great Public Works Departments, it was most impolitic and unwise to allow the railways to pass out of their hands into those of private syn-

Mr. Childers wished to ask a question of some importance. In 1874 a Committee on Indian Railways sat, and its report strongly deprecated any further guarantees being given by the Government. He should like to know whether the policy recommended by that Committee was being observed.

Sir J. Gorst said that the policy had been observed as far as-possibly could be. There was at the present moment no intention to guarantee any further railways.

Mr. A. O'Connor remarked that the Bill resulted in the addition of something like twenty millions sterling to the fixed debt of India. Considering what India was now suffering from the depreciation of the rupee, any addition to her liabilities was a very serious consideration. The Under-Secretary for India ought to give them such information as he possessed with regard to the gross and net income of these railways.

Dr. Clark moved that the Bill be read a second time that day six months.

The hon. member was speaking at twelve o'clock, when, by the rules of the House, the debate stood adjourned.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

At a time, when the serried masses of armed men assembled, At a time, when the serried masses of armed men assembled, and the enormous military preparations made, in some cases at least at the imminent risk of bankruptcy, by every State on the Continent of Europe, for a war which cannot be long deferred (and which the death of that gallant, yet pacifically disposed, Paladin the late Emperor William, probably brings within the immediate future) attract the attention of the least observant, the question may well be put, Can we keep out of such an all but universal conflict? We fear that there can be but one opinion as to the impossibility of our doing so. And then comes the further query, What is to prevent a combatant England, dependent on foreign sources for a large proportion of its food-supplies, from being starved into submission within of its food-supplies, from being starved into submission within the first few months of a declaration of war? One-sided "Free" trade has brought us to such a pass that it is difficult to answer this question satisfactorily. And Mr. C. A. Cripps, in his article on "Free trade and the Economists," supplies much food for reflection on our present fiscal policy, which seems specially designed for the annihilation of nearly every British industry, imprimis, that most important one, agriculture. "The English people" (a phrase against the common abuse of which "An Englishman" (p. 62) warmly protests) may be expected, sooner or later, to awake to this wanton sacrifice of their interests, and to see, as other nations have seen, that the only truly Free trade is that which is based on reciprocity, and which, in other words, is Fair trade.

The reform of the House of Lords has, not unnaturally, considering recent scandals, engaged a good deal of attention.

Mr. G. N. Curzon, the Conservative Member for the Southport Division of Lancashire, contributes to the present issue of the "National" the first of two articles on this subject, embodying (but with more elaboration of details) the views to which he gave utterance in speaking, last Friday, on Mr. Labouchere's motion for the abolition of the Upper House. The question, though scarcely a "burning" one, deserves, and will no doubt receive, early attention; and there could scarcely be a more favourable time for its solution than one in which a Conservation of the there were adverted to the second relative Ministeria of the second rela favourable time for its solution than one in which a Conserva-tive Ministry is in power, and when the Prime Minister, unlike his predecessor, will not insult the Hereditary Chamber by telling it that its members are "up in a balloon." Turning to the House of Commons, or rather to the constituencies which create it, we find a clever, rather than a convincing, article in favour of "Women's Suffrage" from Mrs. Henry Fawcett, the widow of the late universally-esteemed Postmaster-General.

widow of the late universally-esteemed Postmaster-General. We see no reason to modify the opinion which we have repeatedly expressed on thi ssubject.

Everything which Mr. Matthew Arnold writes is worth reading; and his article on "Disestablishment in Wales" is no exception. Believing "the power of attraction in the Church of England to be great and increasing," and deprecating its disestablishment as "a stupid remedy, a mere work of destruction" (p. 13), he thinks that the Church ought not "to be established sole," but that large concessions should, in the interests of the Church itself, be made in districts where "almost every soul is a Dissenter."

We have endeavoured to keep Ireland, as far as possible.

We have endeavoured to keep Ireland, as far as possible, out of the legislative programme of the present session. But the Irish question is ever with us, and it is, emphatically, one regarding which plain speaking is desirable. Mr. G. C. Brodrick's "Plain Facts about Ireland" furnish a real armoury of controversial weapons which are well adapted for general

The well-known initials "R. B. C." are appended to a vigorous onslaught on the defendant in the case of Allopathy v. Homeopathy. Of this perennial controversy we may (if it be permitted to parody Shakespeare) say:—

"Age cannot wither it, nor time assuage Its infinite asperity.

Without professing to accept the infinitesimal doctrine—a thing totally distinct, by the way, from the celebrated similia simibilus—we are not prepared to deny that medical science owes a great debt of gratitude to homoeopathy for exposing the absurdity of filling a patient's stomach with incongruous medicinal agents, and leaving them to fight it out in the dark. Few islands in the Mediterranean (Crete and Rhodes are perhaps the sole exception) are more interesting than Cyprus; and we rejoice to see that there is some prospect of a systematic exploration of its many remains of antiquity. Mr. Ulick Burke's paper, "What we have done for Cyprus," contains much readable information respecting the acquisition, for making which Lord Beaconstield was so roundly a bused.

contains much readable information respecting the acquisition, for making which Lord Beaconstield was so roundly abused. Tom Coriate, the traveller of 1608 and subsequent years, hailed from Somersetshire, and well deserved the praise of the Biographie Universelle as "Le type de ces voyageurs que rien ne rebute, et tels que la grande Bretagne en a produit plus que toute autre nation." His travels in Europe, published in 1611, under the quaint title of "Coryate his Crudities," are the subject of a pleasant article by Mr. M. H. Dimsdale. The undaunted explorer subsequently visited Syria, Persia, and India, reaching (on foot) the capital of the "Great Mogul." He died on his return journey, in 1617.

A STUDY OF RELIGION.*

To the thoughtful and reflective reader there is something singularly attractive in the analysis of religion. Nor could it well be otherwise, for not only is the subject of stupendous importance, but the interest of peeping into the unseen realms of futurity cannot well fail to entice and to allure. But the difficulties of the situation are neither few nor far between. difficulties of the situation are neither tew nor far between. The keenest intellects, the most subtle understandings, at times fail to grasp questions so momentous, so intangible, that they seem to merge into the mists of eternity. How, too, can the capacities of human intelligence analyse the "Great Unknown?" Who by searching can find out God?" To put things in the true but distressing terms of a logical dilemma, "If there is no knowing whether I know, how can I know the boundaries of my knowledge?" The form in which this mental enigma is given are Dr. Martineau's own words.

How then is the barrier to be overcome? To ask such a

How, then, is the barrier to be overcome? To ask such a question is easy; to answer it needs two goodly volumes by one question is easy; to answer it needs two goodly volumes by one of the most intelligent inquirers of modern times; the few lines of a review would utterly fail to touch even the fringe of this vexed and intricate problem. It must suffice to say that a great help in the study of religion is analogy. If, for example, we see that day by day persons around us pass to their long account, we may fairly and reasonably assume that our turn will come in due time. It is impossible to prove that such will be the case till death steps in and settles the dispute. Yet who amongst us would dare to deem himself immortal? Yet who amongst us would dare to deem himself immortal? Similarly in the deep and hidden mysteries of the future world analogy is a material aid. When it is clear that the system of the present world is working towards gradual improvement when the most casual observer can find ample evidence that the when the most casual observer can find ample evidence that the chain is unfinished, is it not fair to suppose that the completion must be brought about somehow and sometime? If not, then, during this life, when can it be save in a future state of existence? As before, there is no proof on this head; but if we believe in death on the score of analogy, why is the human intellect to be denied the right of placing credit in an eternal life basing its conception upon this very same groundwork of analogy?

This is one of the methods worked out in an endless variety of change, in every form of thought and imagination, in Dr. Martineau's most thoughtful, most masterly "Study of Re-

That his arguments are abstruse, that his deductions are at times bewildering, that his language is replete with little used terms; in a word, that his language is replete with little used terms; in a word, that the book wants reading and re-reading, is, of course, just what might have been expected. A "study" must be studied, but to draw attention to a very remarkable work is alike a duty and a pleasure. And if our readers approach these volumes with the interest which we attach to them, our object will have been amply fulfilled.

ADELAIDE RISTORI.*

To say that Ristori is a wonderful woman is, perhaps, only another way of saying that she is Ristori. Her life has been a well-nigh unbroken series of triumphs from the period when, at the mature age of three months, she made her first appearance on the stage as a baby in arms, on which occasion she squalled so lustily and refused to behave herself with becoming decorum, that, emphatically, she attracted more attention than all the other actors put together. "Under every sky," writes the authoress of the autobiography under review, "I have personated the immortal heroines of immortal masternieges and I have seen the powerful accents of human passion. pieces, and I have seen the powerful accents of human passion thrill with intense emotion the most different peoples." Her debut and childhood were passed in Italy, where she remained till her marriage. In due course she betook herself to France, mainly to avoid the difficulties and absurdities which the Government Censor created in the region of art in the sunny climes which had given her birth. In this gay city she had many triumphs, but the roving spirit was upon her, and she resolved to make a tour in Europe, to be followed by a visit to America; and even this wandering, unsettled mode of life did not satisfy her propensities for change of scene and the resture property and the statement of the satisfy her propensities for change of scene and t pastures new, so she ultimately took a journey round the Everywhere she proved an enormous success, and why? The answer is simple. She took unbounded pains in studying her part; difficulties of language, difficulties of tradition, difficulties of art, were each and all surmounted. She never presumed upon her talents, and as a result when on the boards before an audience she thought, she felt, she realised her part; the character to be sustained was for the time her own very self; it was natural, not assumed, real; not artificial. And is not the lesson in life to be derived from a perusal of this interesting autobiography at once important and practical, in so far as we are taught that the road to success is arduous, steep and thorny, and we see that once again in the history of triumph the old adage has proved true—omnia vincit labor.

THE GREVILLE MEMOIRS.+

"Living as I do with men of all parties, I collect a variety of opinions, some of them intrinsically worth little, except as straws which show which way the wind blows." Such is Mr. Greville's apology; but such is, in fact, the raison d'être for the interest and value which attach to his most charming invarial. There is no party bias: perhaps on the whole the journal. There is no party bias; perhaps, on the whole, the author stands forth as an old-fashioned Liberal, but of the mildest and most unobtrusive nature. His criticisms are aimed at "all sorts and conditions of men." None escape; none are scot-free. It is interesting, also, to read by the light of anno domini 1888 the events of the earlier decades of the content. anno domin 1888 the events of the earlier decades of the century. Of course, sometimes the entries in the journal are ludicrously wide of the mark; but this is a charm rather than a disparagement. To read backwards is almost as enjoyable as it would be to read forwards, though, perhaps, not equally advantageous, and mistakes are occasion rather for laughter and fun than contempt and disdain. Who amongst us can at this crisis amidst nations read the events of the time even one day in advance? So in fault ourselves, we should be generous day in advance? So, in fault ourselves, we should be generous to the failings of others.

The first volume deals with the events of the reign of King Geeorge the Fourth, and the reader is brought face to face with the celebrities of the day. Canning, a statesman "who saw everything and did everything himself—not a dispatch was received that he did not read, nor one written that he did not dictate or correct." Brougham, the erratic, talented, flighty orator, who "neither commands respect by his character, nor inspires confidence by his genius." Thomas Slingsby Duncombe, an advanced Radical, at a period when a Radical was an almost unknown being—a perfect rara avis. The illustrious an advanced Radical, at a period when a Radical was an almost unknown being—a perfect rara avis. The illustrious Duke of Wellington, "a man of great energy, decision, and authority, with talents of a very superior, though not of the most shining, description." Wetherell, who delivered one of the finest orations ever uttered in the House of Commons when he was so drunk that the Speaker said, "the only lucid interval he had was that between his waistcoat and his breeches," an allusion to the peculiar custom of unbuttoning his braces when addressing the House. Mackintosh, a man of "prodigious memory," but "amiable, modest and unassuming." Scott, the immortal novelist, a writer so voluminous that he once went twice over the same portion of a history of Scotland, the second composition being perused in forgetfulness that he was covering ground which he had already traversed. Then the reader is indulged with tirades against the Church as a "bad concern." He finds Boycotting no new offence, save as regards name, and much more alike curious and new.

The second volume opens with the accession of William IV,

The second volume opens with the accession of William IV, of which monarch a charming anecdote is told in regard to his mode of showing grief at the death of his brother. This portion of Mr. Greville's memoirs, which deals rather with measures than men, will be read with interest, as drawing the veil aside in connection with the great Reform Bill, the O'Contact of the contact of nel agitation, in regard to which latter it will suffice to say that history is now repeating itself, in so far that the events of 1888 are, mutatis mutandis, an exact replica of the occurrences of fifty years ago—the same "mobocracy," the same want of courtesy and manners, the same [foul-mouthed derision, the same reliance upon outrage, the same disregard of reason. Mr. Greville also tells of the first advent of Asiatic cholera in England, whereupon the authorities organised a Board of Health, which, as soon as established, met at a public-house, where they all got so drunk that they were utterly unable to transact any business.

where they all got so drunk that they were utterly unable to transact any business.

The third volume is chiefly political, but it deals with an extremely difficult and delicate period of English History. The Whigs and Tories were so equally balanced that a single speech of marked ability not infrequently led to a change of Government. And to add to the difficulty, King William IV. was wont to interfere in politics to an extent that, on one memorable occasion, he absolutely turned out the Liberal Ministry of the day and replaced them by a Conservative Administration, solely on the ground that he disliked the one and liked the other. There are also some most interesting entries in regard to Sir Robert Peel, Macaulay, M. Thiers, Graham, Lord John Russell, Palmerston, Lord Stanley, Lord Lansdowne, Lord Melbourne, &c., &c. There are, too, details about the relations between the Government of the day and the Times, which tend to show that whatever may be the case about the relations between the Government of the day and the Times, which tend to show that whatever may be the case nowadays, then statesmen had the good sense to see that the fourth estate was a power in the realm. One strange tale merits attention. Stephenson, the great engineer, is stated, on the authority of these Memoirs, to have proclaimed that "his doubt was not how fast his engines could be made to go, but at what pace it would be proper to stop; that he could make them travel with greater speed than any bird can cleave the air; and that he had ascertained that 400 miles an hour was the extreme velocity which the human frame could endure—at which it could move and exist!" at which it could move and exist!

—at which it could move and exist?

We have endeavoured to give a cursory outline of these most fascinating volumes; they are a perfect mine of information in regard to the sayings and doings of the Upper Ten. Mr. Greville seems to have been a sort of go-between in high life. He was always consulted on delicate and difficult occasions, and his readers have the opportunity of sharing his successes, his failures, and his excitements.

THE GOVERNMENT YEAR BOOK.*

The aim and object of the Government Year Book, as given in the author's own words, "is to exhibit the principal forms and methods of Government in each particular state, and then, having these facts laid down for ready reference and com-parison, to review each year the most striking of contemporary events, and to note how they hinge upon or tend to modify political organisation." The idea is a happy one, for in these days of political intelligence and democratical tendencies it is supremely important that the many-headed public should understand the methods of government which are adopted throughout the body politic of the world at large. Mr. Sergeant has executed his task conscientiously, ably, and with a complete absence of bias. He is warmly to be congratulated upon a very valuable addition to the standard works of the day.

REPRESENTATIVE COUNCILS IN INDIA.

It has been too often our misfortune in calling attention to the utterances of the Native Press in India, especially that of Bengal, to have to write in terms of condemnation of its seditious tone or of the hostile attitude towards the Paramount Power, which it mistakes for the independence of patriotism. It has been said that there is no real word in the Bengali language which can be accepted as a true equivalent for the English word "gratitude," and hence it has been somewhat unfairly argued that there is no such sentiment in the Bengali nature. We should be sorry to accept such a charge as fully proven, but no surprise need be felt that it should have been made, considering the manner in which "Young Bengal' has "returned thanks" for all the advantages of peace, security, and education which British rule has given to him. The very ideas, hopes, and ambitions which he now holds or pretends to hold have all resulted from that English influence which he now condemns or derides. His abuse of English officials who have been honestly striving to do their duty towards India as well as towards England has long been a scandal in the land, and no Government except our own would have been so tolerant in allowing it the free play it has had. But as good comes frequently out of evil it is possible that the long suffering of the Paramount Power will be rewarded by its aims and actions being better understood and by confidence in its sincerity being gained and strengthened. "All are not Israel who are of Israel," and the honourable exceptions to the vituperative and disloyal class of the Native newspapers in India are, we are glid to say, increasing. One such honourable exception we are pleased to find [to-day in the file of the Native papers which has come to hand. The question of representative institutions is one upon which the Indian Press has written much, and not altogether wisely. It has not altogether been in the language of "children crying in the night, and with no language but a cry," but generally in very bad language indeed. Insolence and defiance and threatened appeals to the lowest types of English radicalism or socialism have been allowed to take the place of argument and sober share he expects in the booty reason. And in some cases the attempt has been made to create a union of the evil passions of the several races and creeds of India against the Ruling Authority. Under such circumstances it is satisfactory to find a Native journal of Bengal giving expression thus:—

To the friends of the National Congress, who are likely to work something tangible within the course of a year, it is well that we bring home the truth that the agitation has only begun, and that it will perhaps take years, unless some good angels were to smooth the path, before it can be brought to a successful issue, and it is well that they should know the full extent of the difficulties so as to see what has to be done, and how much help is needed. Those who know anything on the subject are aware that nothing can be done by the Government of India, or the Legislative Councils here. All that the most sympathetic of Viceroys can do is to recommend a reform; of course such recommendations ought to go a good way; but the ultimate reform rests with the Parliament and people of England. The present constitution of our Legislative Councils is fixed by a Parliamentary statute (24 and 25 Victoria, Chapter LXVII.), and Parliament alone can alter a Parliamentary statute.

The first step in the process is to demonstrate without having any loophole for cavil that India, or a large majority in India, wants such a reform; and herein all India have a present duty to perform. The Congress must be more and more representative year by year, all conflicting interests must be reconciled at home. Hindus, Mahomedans, Parsis, Eurasians, domiciled Europeans, must unite for the common end. There must be toleration of each other's views, nothing done or said, at least by the friends of reform, which would excite rancorous feelings in others, and every opportunity availed of by them to bring others to their views. Good feeling is almost infectious, and living as we do in a common country, speaking almost a common language, but, above all, living under a common Government, we do not see why India and the Indians should not be united. Friends of reform must educate themselves and their countrymen to this extent before the agitation even in India can be rendered successful. This will indeed be a grand achievement, and if the Congress and its advocates can achieve this, they shall have done good work indeed. But we must not forget that this will be the very beginning. Though this will clear the way, the final appeal is to England, its Parliament, and its people. The good people of England must know what we want, and want with a united voice. They must be made to feel for us.

If the moderation thus expressed could only become contagious amongst the editors of the Native Press the power for good which that Press would have would be considerable, for the British Government in India and in England would only be too glad to be able to get directly at Native opinion if it be honestly and correctly represented in the Native Press. At present it is not so. That Press should learn that the Government under which India enjoys herpresent security and growing prosperity does not fear the light of truth being thrown upon any question affecting Native interests. It is the darkness which would hide the truth, or the twilight which distorts it, that is objected to. Let the Native Press endeavour to become a truly representative Press, and it will then become what it is not yet—a friend to the people and a power in the land.

ALL British warrant officers, non-commissioned officers and soldiers, ordered home from India to undergo instruction in England, are entitled to receive from the date of embarkation in India to the date of their return to India precisely the same pay and allowances as men of the same rank serving at home.

in India to the date of their return to India precisely the same pay and allowances as men of the same rank serving at home.

The Lahore Tribune says:—We are glad to be able to announce that our friend Mr. Frederic Pincott, of London, who is so well-known for his ceaseless activity in tee interest of India, has been elected patron by the Benares Association. The Benares Association has done a very good thing. It should begin by supplying Mr. Pincott with authentic reports of cases of police oppression to enable him to succeed in the difficult and noble work in that connection he has been doing these many months steadily though silently. The police is a scandal, it is utterly corrupt. From our own experience we can say a man has a better prospect of recovering his stolen property if he goes after the thief himself, instead of calling in the police constable, whose pity for the thief is proportionate to the share he expects in the booty

ARRIVAL OF THE TROOPSHIP "SERAPIS."—Her Majesty's troopship Serapis, 4,173 tons, Captain F. R. Boardman, arrived in harbour on the 16th Feb. from Portsmouth, which port she left on the 3rd January, calling at Queenstown on the 6th, Malta on the 14th, and Port Said on the 18th. She reached Suez on the 20th, and left on the 21st and proceeded on her voyage. At 11 P.M. on the 22nd ult., a bolt of the high presvoyage. At 11 P.M. on the 22nd ult., a bolt of the high pressure cylinder was carried away. No one in the engine room was injured, though one man was standing on the cylinder cover at the time. Soon after the accident the Dutch s.s. Gelderland, bound for Java, was sighted, and was communicated with. She took the Serapis in tow next morning and got into Suez on the 28th. The damage was repaired, and the Serapis left Suez again on the morning of the 2nd inst During the voyage five children died from measles. She brought seventy-one officers, thirteen ladies, four children, 1,268 men, forty-six women, and sixty-three children, belonging to the Rifle Brigade, the Royal Warwick, the West Yorkshire, the Scottish Rifles, the East Lancashire, the Devonshire, Derbyshire, Leinster and other regiments. The troops were landed at the Sassoon Dock and sent by three special trains to Deolali, whence they will be sent to their destinations as follows:—The 2nd Battalion Devonshire to Jhansi, 4th Battalion Royal Brigade to Dinapore, 2nd Battalion Royal Warwick to Jubbulpore, 2nd Derbyshire to Dum Dum, 1st Battalion Leinster to Fort William, 2nd Battalion Scottish Rifles to Ranikhet, 2nd Battalion West Yorkshire to Mooltan, 1st Battalion East Lancashire to Ferozpore, and other regiments to Allahabad, Roorkee, Umballa, Poona, Nusseerabad, Kurrachee, &c. The Scrapis will sail for England on the 21st inst., with the 2nd Battalion East Yorkshire Regiment from Bombay to Aden, and the 2nd Battalion North Stafford Regiment from Aden to England.

OBITUARY.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL WILLIAM SIM MACLEOD, of the Madras Staff Corps, who died last week, at 28, Adamson-road, South Hampstead, entered the Army as Ensign in November, 1858, receiving his Lieutenant's commission five months after. During the China campaign of 1850 deceased served with a squadron of the 1st Dragoons, and was present at the action of Sinho, the capture of Tangchow, the capture of the Taku Forts, and at the surrender of Pekin. He received for his service a medal with two clasps. The deceased officer had seen 28 years' service. His commissions bore date—Captain 1864, Brevet-Major 1875, Major 1883, and Lieutenant-Colonel in 1885.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL RICHARD HAMILTON, C.B., late Madras Staff Corps, died at Torquay on Thursday of last week, aged seventy-seven. He obtained his first commission in January, 1828. He served in the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1857-58, including the affairs of Kubrai, the battle of Banda, and surrender of Kirwee, and received the medal and clasp for Central India. He was placed on the Retired List in December, 1880. In recognition of his services he was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath in May, 1875.

a Companion of the Order of the Bath in May, 1875.

COLONEL WILLIAM HEATHCOTE TAPP, who was killed in an action with the dervishes outside Suakim on Sunday, was born on August 27th, 1855. He entered the Army as a sub-lieutinant in the 69th Foot ii 1875, and was at once gazetted to the Welsh Regiment, in which regiment he got his captaincy in August, 1882. In 1884 he entered the service of the Egyptian Government with the rank of colonel, and at the time of his death was in command of one of the Egyptian regiments garrisoning Suakin. Colonel Tapp for his services in Egypt had received the 4th Class of the Order of the Osmanieh.

Mr. D. Mackinnon.—We regret to announce the death of Mr. Donald Mackinnon, an assistant in the firm of Messrs. Mackinnon, Mackenzie and Co., which sad event occurred on Sunday night at about 10 o'clock. The deceased had for some time been suffering from fever, and though everything that could be done by the doctors attending him, and the other members of the "chummery" where he resided, was done, his condition seemed to get steadily worse, till at last the fever exhibited decided typhoidal symptoms, and the illness ended fatally as stated. For some time the members of the "chummery" had complained of a most offensive smell, the seat of which could not be discovered, although the drains round the building were carefully examined. It was subsequently discovered that the sweeper, from pure laziness, had been for some time using the wastewater pipe, which passed down the wall close to the deceased's window, as a sink, into which he emptied filthy matter which he was too lazy to carry downstairs to dispose of in the usual and proper manner. Thus owing to the culpable negligence of the sweeper, the deceased lost his life. He was very popular in Calcutta, and his large circle of friends will receive the news of his loss with feelings of the deepest sorrow. Foremost in all athletic exercises, a popular member of the Mounted Rifles, and a genial and respected companion, his death at an early age, and at the beginning of his career, will be regretted by all who knew him — Indian Daily News.

Lieutenant-General Thomas Lightfoot.—By the death knew him —Indian Daily News.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL THOMAS LIGHTFOOT.—By the death of Lieutenant-General Lightfoot, C.B., which is announced as having occurred on the 3rd inst., at 16, Victoria-park, at the age of sixty-eight years, the Army has lost an officer who has seen much service in India. Entering the service as ensign in 1838, he served as Brigade-Major to the 5th Brigade at the second relief of Lucknow, and at the defeat of the Gwalior rebels at Cawnpore. He was present at the passage of the Kala Nuddee, and commanded the 84th (York and Lancaster) Regiment at the Alumbagh from January 23 to March 10, 1858, in which year he received rank of Major. Deceased was also present at the capture of Lucknow, the relief of Azimghar, the pursuit of Koer Sing, and all the operations in the Sahabad district, including those which ended in the ejection of the rebels of the Jugdespore Jungles. He subsequently commanded a field column under Brigadier Douglas to the final suppression of the rebellion in Shahabad. For his gallant services he was created a C.B., and was several times mentioned in despatches, bsides being thanked by the Governor-General. He also received the brevets of major and lieutenant-colonel and received a medal and two clasps. Lieutenant-General Lightfoot was the son of the late Lieutenant-General Thomas Lightfoot, C.B., and received his rank of Lieutenant-General in 1882.

The Indian Planters' Gazette says:—"With deep regret we record the death of as good a sportsman as ever drew breath, Captain Broughton, of the 8th Hussars, who has fallen a victim to that fell scion of the fever—King Typhoid. Popular throughout his short life either at home, at school, or as a brother soldier, a genial, kind-hearted fellow, whose good nature knew no bounds, his loss has not only cast a gloom over Meerut society, but caused a blank not easily to be filled in the sporting regiment in which he was so universally liked. The gates of Valhallah will never open to braver soldier or more thorough gentleman. Peace to his manes."

thorough gentleman. Peace to his manes."

The same journal in recording the death of Mr. F. F. Wyman remarks that "Both those able papers, the Tea and Medical Gazette, owed their origin to his energy and enterprise, while as a member of the Bengal Legislative Council Mr. Wyman earned from the public deservedly high praise for his unbending plain speaking, and his name will long be remembered with respect by the colleagues who sat with him on the Municipal Board. He had also for many years been one of the Honorary Magistrates of the Capital. As an honest, able, and fearless public servant and journalist, his loss to the Calcutta community will be great, while the many tea-planters who have known him chiefly through his Gazette will learn with regret that the pen which so often was fearlessly used in their service can be wielded no more."

It seems that Queen Anne is not dead! A correspondent writes to me:—"You know how often I have lauded the kind of life we lead in Queen Anne's Mansions: its freedom from worries; its facilities for hospitality; the opportunities it gives for kindnesses to a great many people; its release from burdensome responsibilities. I have now to speak of it in illness. I have just had a sharp attack of congestion of the lungs, when the resources of the house have been called on freely and without stint. Imagine the comfort of being able to simply order and be supplied! From hothouse grapes to linseed meal for poultices; from beef-tea, sweetbreads, mutton chops, to fresh blankets—all that can possibly be wanted is at hand; and the speaking-tube serves as a Slave of the Lamp or a wishing cap. There is no fuss and no confusion. Your nurse and your friend are accommodated with rooms at a word; and night or day you can have help and outside attendance. There is no derangement of a whole household, as in ordinary families; and the concealed wheels do not creak in the working. Add to this, supreme care and kindness, small attentions and great, the most thoughtful consideration, the most friendly solicitude from the master to the servants, and sickness is really robbed of some of its pains and all its domestic inconveniences in our lordly Mansions. For myself, I can never speak with sufficient gratitude of the kindness I have received—a kindness which has nothing to do with £ s. d., and which indeed no money could repay. And as I have had a rather hard pinch, I am in a position to testify, as I do, with thankfulness and sincerity, to the good feeling of all concerned, and the ease and comfort with which the supplies were obtained."—The World.

"VOICE OF INDIA.

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE CF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthury (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Poice of India thus gives forth a clear-sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rule wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally doclie and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no tear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Etatesman, October 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 28

The Calculta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sen a from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout ts career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited prompters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineter

BROAD ARROW

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high charactor of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially intoresting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and exporience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

trations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "aupplements."

Sorvice Journals, even with the request ments."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marino bureaux of the Fren3h, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

DIAMANTÉ BRILLIANTS

The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS originally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Messrs. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand monde and elite of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 18-Carat Gold by the best Diamond Settors, exactly in the manner of the finestBrazilian Diamonds.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MARCH 19, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 2nd March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 29th February; and from Calcutta to the 28th

The Supreme Legislative Council met at Calcutta on February 24th, when the Hon. Mr. Scoble presented the report of the Select Committee on the Imprisonment for Debt Bill. The Bill has undergone very considerable modification in Committee. In its new form it will no longer be possible to imprison either paupers or women for debt, and the decision as to whether a debtor is in a position which would justify his imprisonment will rest with the Court. Some valuable criticism of the Bill was given by Sir Charles Elliott.

THE Viceroy, after visiting Kashmir, will reach Simla the first week in May. His Excellency's visit to Lucknow is fixed for April 2nd.

THE services of the Hon. Mr. J. W. Quinton in the Legislative Council this season at Simla will not be required. He will consequently resume his place in the Board of Revenue in the North-West Provinces, thereby causing Mr. J. C. Robertson to revert to the Commissionership of Rohilkhund.

Mr. A. P. Howell, Commissioner of the Hoshungabad Division, takes furlough immediately preparatory to retirement.

Mr. Marsden, officiating Administrator-General in Bengal, reverts to his substantive appointment as Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta upon Mr. L. P. D. Broughton's return on March 1st.

SIR ALEXANDER WILSON is likely to be the coming Chairman of the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce.

A DEMONSTRATION in honour of the Viceroy is being arranged for at Calcutta, and a committee is being organised to carry out the necessary details.

THE settlement of the estate of the late ex-King of Oudh is now under the considera ion of the Government of India. It is expected orders will be issued before the Viceroy leaves Calcutta for Rewah.

It is intended to lay a telegraph line forthwith from Darjiling to Kalimpong. A light field wire may also be laid onwards to the Rilli River.

THE 32nd Pioneers have reached the Rilli River, where they will proceed to build the bridge forthwith. They have already put the road up the Teesta Valley in thoroughly good order.

An order for 12,000 tons of steel rails for the East Indian Railway has gone home. The steel rail market is firmer than it has been, but the contract should be placed on board at about £4 per ton.

The scheme for the reorganisation of Divisional, Brigade and Station Commands may be expected to see the light in the spring. The proposals of the Government of India were submitted to the Secretary of State last autumn, and were returned in due course for reference on certain points. The scheme has now been sent back to the India Office for final consideration.

THE officers who took part in the railway time-table conference at Allahabad were the Consulting Engineers for Railways, Calcutta and Lucknow, the traffic managers of the East India and Oudh and Rohilkhand Railways, and a Traffic Officer of the North-Western Railway.

AYUB KHAN and his followers from Meshed are reported to be within easy distance of Teheran. They will embark at Bagdad for India about the beginning of April, and will have a steamer to themselves.

The amendment of the Civil Code will shortly be taken in hand. Sir Charles Elliott, alluding to the subject in Council, indicated the nature of several of the changes which will probably be introduced.

A Bombay journal strongly urges upon the commercial community the necessity of establishing a Calcutta Exchange, as likely to promote the interests of trade and simplify the relations between buyers and sellers, and brokers and agents.

At the first meeting of the Calcutta Madrassah Union Club Mr. Scoble delivered an interesting and forcible speech, pointing out the importance of such associations as educational instruments, and urging on Mahomedans the necessity of putting themselves on a level with Hindus in the race for Government employment. It was right that the study of Arabic and Persian should be valued and maintained, but for those who aspired to enter Government service attention to English was indispensable.

The raiders who killed Lieutenant Stewart managed to recross the frontier before the party under Lieutenant Baird and Captain Shakespear could cut them off. This party has now been withdrawn to Demagiri, and will probably be unable to complete the reconnaissance in the Hill Tracts this season. The identity of the tribesmen who formed the raiding party is a puzzle to the local authorities. The name given is Mulein Pois, but no such people have ever been heard of before. It is unlikely that any expedition will be sent this season against the clan, as rain falls in the hills during March, and such paths as there are become impracticable. Next cold weather the country will be systematically opened out by combined operations from Chittagong and Burma.

THE escort of the late Boundary Commission arrived at Kushk on Feb. 17, having marched from the Oxus without a casualty.

CAPTAINS MASON AND WAHAB, of the Royal Engineers, with three or four Native surveyors, have made a trip up the Gomal Pass. They were under a tribal escort, and intended to proceed about fifty miles inland, but they were obliged to return owing to tribal jealousies and disputes.

The Bolan railway has been breached in several places by floods.

LATEST Khashmir news concerning the disturbance in the neighbourhood of Gilgit indicates that it will pass away without perceptible effort beyond the locality. A force of 1,500 men has been despatched by the durbar towards the two petty forts, Chuprote and Chilput, which have been seized by the raiders, and news will doubtless come in due time of their expulsion therefrom without too much bloodshed.

LIEUT. A. W. HUNT, 13th Bengal Lancers, died at Bareilly on the 23rd February from a gun accident. This promising young officer had but lately joined the regiment, in which he was very popular, and his loss has thrown a great gloom over the station.

Mr. S. S. Jones, officiating Magistrate and Collector of Puri, committed suicide a few days ago. Mr. Jones was found lying dead with his throat cut. The unfortunate gentleman joined the Service in 1873, and leaves a wife and family at present resident in Murshidabad. This is the second case of suicide in the Bengal Service within a very short period, Mr. H. J. Fasson, late Collector at Backergunge, having made away with himself about two months ago.

NOTES.

THE news telegraphed by the Times correspondent to-day, to the effect that the Bengali Press is virulent in its abuse of Lord Dufferin, may occasion regret, but need cause little surprise to those who know the character of that Press. The correspondent wonders at its hostile tone, considering all that the present Viceroy has done to conciliate the Natives of Bengal, and all that Lady Dufferin has been doing for the benefit of the women of India. But their Excellencies have no doubt learnt that the best way to treat the scribblers is to show that their remarks cause neither pain nor irritation. Let them pass by as the idle wind. The statesman who accepts the great responsibility of an Indian Viceroyalty must accept with it this trouble—that of being maligned and misrepresented in certain quarters. His own conscience, his own countrymen, and time must alone be looked to to do him justice.

The Indian Mirror, published at Calcutta in English, and supposed to be the representative organ of the enlightened Babús, has led the way in this abuse of Lord Dufferin's administration, and its tone has, of course, been readily adopted by the more ignorant vernacular Press. But the Reis and Rayet, another Native organ, printed in English, takes its contemporary the Mirror to task in a curious way. It says:—"However numerous his offences, whatever the enormity of his transgressions, the Earl of Dufferin has not yet been definitively adjudged an outlaw. The poor Viceroy of India is entitled to some protection from causeless attacks and incoherent reproaches, and frivolous annoyances. In the interest of the Empire he ought to be protected. Nor ought the task be left to the British in India. The Natives, who are constantly demanding justice, ought to show the example of it themselves—let loyalty alone. Having never been among the admirers of the administration, we are better able, without loss of self-respect, to perform the duty."

The Hindu inclines to be patronising:—"We are glad that his Excellency correctly appreciates the attitude of the Native community towards his administration. Whenever opportunities presented themselves, it must be said, he met in a confiding and generous spirit the aspirations of the people. He was never unwilling to take counsel of competent Natives, and he was uniformly courteous and considerate. He is quite right in his belief that he has the sympathy and good-will of his Native fellow-subjects. If he has not done much for which the people of India will remember him with feelings of enduring gratitude, they are, we believe, willing to allow that it is not because Lord Dufferin was wanting in sympathy for their aspirations and appreciation of their wants, but because suitable opportunities did not present themselves during the term of his office.

THE best answer, however, to all the "irresponsible "chatter" of the Bengali Press is to be found in the action of the Native Chiefs and Princes in following that of the Nizam of Hyderabad. A telegram to the Times last week gave the list of the moneys and troops made by the feudatories to the Government:—"The total amount of money offered reaches Rs. 1,03,80,000, including Hyderabad, Rs. 60,00,000; Cashmere, Rs. 10,00,000; Jodhpore, Rs. 10,00,000; Bhurtpore, Rs. 8,00,000; Kota, Rs. 6,00,000; Kapurthala, Rs. 5,00,000; Nabha, Rs. 4,00,000, and Maler Kotla, Rs. 80,000. These Princes offer troops in addition. Of the other Princes, the ruler of Mysore expresses a wish to raise and maintain a suitable military force, trained by British officers; the ruler of Patiala offers troops whenever required; the ruler of Bhawalpore a contingent of troops and money aid, proportioned to his resources; the ruler of Tonk the services of himself, his family, his troops, and the whole resources of his State; the ruler of Alwar money and troops whenever required; the ruler of Rampore to defray the expense incurred in raising and maintaining a Native Infantry regiment in every war, ogether with all the resources of his State; the ruler of Mandi the services of himself and the resources of his State; the rulers of Suket and Mantes the like; the ruler of Loharu the services of himself, his brothers, his property, and a caravan of fifty camels; and the ruler of Chamba land for cantonments." A later telegram states that the Maharaja Holkar has also placed the resources of his State at the service of the Empire.

SIR LEPEL GRIFFIN has spoken publicly in India again, and also again in no uncertain language. In presenting the Raja of Rutlam with the insignia of a Knight Commander of the Indian Empire he is reported to have expressed a hope that the higher grades of that order should be reserved for the recognition of conspicuous political merit, and not be bestowed as is the G.C.S.I. or the Garter for reasons altogether apart from merit or virtue—these insignia being possibly "worn on the breast of an illustrious prince or by a useless débauchée or tyrant."

HE contrasted the Government of India with Providence—perhaps rather to the advantage of the former. "The Government of India represents an ideal Providence, not with indiscriminate and careless hand showering its rain of favours on the evil and good, on the just and unjust, but rewarding the good and public-spirited ruler and degrading and punishing the evil oppressor of a people." And he very practically wound up his exordium by mentioning that in another part of Central India it would in a few days be his painful duty to deprive the ruling prince of all his administrative powers, in accordance with the sentence passed on him by the Supreme Government, for continued neglect and abuse of them."

"The Hurnai Railway, when judged by any reasonalle standard, must remain," according to the Civil and Military Gazette, "on record as a case of reckless and disgraceful extravagance almost beyond parallel; and a nice calculation might bring General Brown's method of railroad construction and our incometax into the relation of simple cause and effect." A parallel, however, may be found in the Bolan railway, which was laid down in much the same manner. These two lines were laid down without any estimates, or surveys even, having been made beforehand. It will, therefore, be interesting to learn, when the accounts of the lines are published, how much was really expended upon these monumental works.

THE P. and O., that often abused but much appreciated company, comes in for a little wrath from the Pioneer to hand to-day: - "So far the accelerated Mail Service which the Peninsular and Oriental Company have contracted to provide has proved a fraud, at any rate, to everyone out of Bombay; nor has Bombay itself much cause for grati-The mails both of the 3rd and 10th inst. were signalled between twelve and two in the morning, seven or eight hours too late for the up-mail train of the preceding evening and two or three hours too late to be sent up by special train, so as to overtake the mail train at Jubbulpore. Two or three hours more ocean speed would have accelerated the delivery of letters to all India above Bombay by twenty-four hours. Do the P. and O. Company understand this? On both the occasions referred to the letters from Europe were detained in Bombay about fifteen hours."

Indian Gold Mining Shares.—There was no change on Saturday in these shares. Mysore Shares were last quoted 4½ to 4½, Nundydroog 1 9·16 to 1 11-16, Indian Consolidated 13s. 6d. to 14s. 6d., Balaghat-Mysore (15s. paid) 11s. to 12s., ditto fully paid (£1) 16s. to 17s., Ooregum 18s. 6d. to 19s. 6d., ditto Preference 18s. to 19s., Devala-Moyar 7s. 6d. to 8s. 6d., Nine Reefs 19s. to 21s., Mysore Reefs (£1 paid) 6s. to 6s. 3d., Mysore-Wynaad (17s. paid) 4s. to 5s., Indian Glenrock 7s. to 8s., Gold Fields of Mysore 1 9·16 to 1 11-16, New South-East Wynaad 3s. to 4s., Indian Gold Mines (of Glasgow) 5s. to 6s., Wentworth (17s. paid) 5s. to 7s., Wynaad Perseverance 3s. 6d. to 4s., and Mysore West (fully paid) 5s. 6d. to 6s. 6d.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA MARCH 18.

The Lieut.-Governor of the North-Western Provinces held a durbar in Meerut on the 10th inst., at which 500 Native Princes and gentlemen attended. In the course of his speech he said:—

"I find education well advanced, agriculture very flourishing, and generally everything indicating an age of rapid progress, wherein the march of intellect and the advance of civilisation give no time to lose. A benevolent Government has started the system of local self-government, whereby its subjects can rule themselves, and look after all the small concerns of life and so aid in the general improvement, by assist-cerns of life, and so aid in the general improvement, by assisting the officials to administer the State for the eventual good of all.

"There is one among us here this afternoon who has done much for the people of India, and who will be better able to explain all I wish explained. Yes, Sir Syud Ahmed Khan is one from among you all, and one who has worked for years in one from among you all, and one who has worked for years in your cause."

This well-merited testimony to the public character of this distinguished Mahomedan has served as a text for an indignant attack in the Bengalee Press. To praise a Mahomedan is almost as bitter a ground for offence in the eyes of the advanced Bengalee politicians as to praise a European, and all this notwithstanding their professed ideal of a unified India, governed from within by a Native representative Parliament, and safeguarded from without by English ships and bayonets. The feeling of sensitive jealousy which the race and creed antagonism of the Hindoos and Mahomedans produces is easily stirred into bitter animosity by Government action. The stirred into bitter animosity by Government action. The resentment by the Hindoos of the public bestowal of praise by a Lieutenant-Governor on a Mahomedan illustrates in a remarkable manner what an impossible dream is cherished by remarkable manner what an impossible dream is cherished by Young Bengal of a unified Indian nation, based upon a political fusion of the innumerable Indian races, castes, and creeds.

Yesterday Lady Dufferin distributed prizes to the Volunteers. Lord and Lady Dufferin, accompanied by the Ladies Helen and Hermione Blackwood, the young Duke of Schleswig-Holstein, and the whole of the personal Staff, arrived on the ground at five o'clock. In the course of his speech the Viceroy said he sincerely regretted that it was probably the last time he would inspect them. He then proceeded to congratulate them on the distinction gained by the splendid victory over the crack team composed of the Commander-in-Chief and his Staff, and also on winning from the whole Bengal army the Presidency Rifle Association Cup. At the conclusion of the ceremony a bracelet was presented to Lady Dufferin by the corps, as a mark of high esteem.

The following Native letter from Afghanistan has been published relative to Lord Dufferin's resignation:—

published relative to Lord Dufferin's resignation:—
"I do not know what the Russian Government will think when it hears how the strong friendship of the English Government under Lord Dufferin has gained over the Afghans. The chiefs of Swat, Bajour, and Dir, as well as Asmar, and those who attended the durbar recently held at Peshawur, are filled with sorrow at Lord Dufferin's departure from India. When Mohamed Tamas Khan, ruler of Asmar, who is at present at Jellalabad, first heard of the news he at once wrote for confirmation, and when the fact was proved to him he received it with great regret.

with great regret.

"The departure of Lord Dufferin is regretted by all in Afghanistan. Even Khunjan Khan, ruler of Ryat, on the Pung Kora river, although he was not invited to the durbar, has expressed his regret at the Viceroy's departure. All of us Afghans who were honoured with an interview with the highly-praised Viceroy of India must be grateful to the Commissioner of Peshawur who arranged it."

Influential Mahomedan meetings have been held at Amritsur and other up-country places to express regret at the retirement of Lord Dufferin. It is proposed to hold a representative demonstration in honour of the Viceroy at Lahore. The public meeting in Calcutta will be held on Wednesday next. A Hindoo nobleman, the Maharajah of Durbhunga, will preside, and will be supported by the leading Mahomedan Prince in Bengal, the Nawab of Moorshedabad. The attendance will be thoroughly representative, notwithstanding the fact that the leading newspapers of the Bengalee Irreconcilables have been endeavouring to terrify the Hindoos and prevent them from taking part in the meeting. The attacks on Lord Dufferin in these newspapers have been so coarsely virulent and shameless that they have entirely failed to excite even Native prejudices in Bengal. The small but energetic and zealous band of Bengalee malcontents has been applying Influential Mahomedan meetings have been held at Amand zealous band of Bengalee malcontents has been applying all its political machinery to work up counter demonstrations in various districts in Bengal, but hitherto it has, strange to say, been unsucessful.

It seems difficult to account for all this apparently bitter animosity directed at so enlightened and conciliatory a ruler as Lord Dufferin, especially when it is remembered to what an extent Lady Dufferin has consecrated her best energies to mitigate the sufferings of Indian women.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MARCH 17.

A very successful attack has been made on the dacoits in the Pagyee district in the Chindwin valley, near the place where Major Kennedy and Captain Beville were killed. Lieut. Hunter, of the 10th Bengal Infantry, who has, with 100 rifles of that regiment, been engaged in attacking the so-called "Shwegyobin" Prince," surprised the prince's camp, capturing 45 prisoners, 127 guns, 71 dahs, 45 head of cattle, and a large quantity of ammunition and food. The prince and his two chief lieutenants narrowly escaped, and fled towards Mingin. A number of cases of dacoity occurred last week in the Mandalay district. In the Ava district a column under Colonel Walker surprised Boh Toke's gang, killing four and wounding two dacoits. Our casualities included one ressaldad willed and one trooper wounded. Successful encounters with small gangs of dacoits have taken place in several districts of Upper Burma. A very successful attack has been made on the dacoits in Upper Burma.

Several cases of cholera have occurred among the detachments of the Rifle Brigade in Upper Burma.

Detailed information has been received of the visit of Captain Triscott's columns to the jade mines and Endawgyee lake. The jade mines are situate near the junction of the Uru and Nanthan rivers, about 80 miles from Manoung, the intervening country being very difficult. The mines are in the territory of a Kachyen Tsawbwa named Kongsehaing, one of the most powerful of the Kachyen chiefs. The column halted on its arrival at Mamsa, about seven miles from the mines. A small party sent on to examine the mines was forced to return without visiting them, owing to the presence of large bodies of armed Kachyens. Kongsehaing was in the immediate neighbourhood with a large number of followers. The column remained halted for two days, while negotiations were carried on with Kongsehaing to obtain his consent to the troops proceeding to the mines.

On the evening of the second day an ultimatum was sent to Kongsehaing, stating that if he did not visit the camp before noon next day the column would advance to the mines whether he consented or not. This message had the desired effect. At 10 o'clock next morning Kongsehaing, accompanied by 200 armed followers and about a dozen minor chiefs, visited the camp. The majority of these men had never before seen Europeans, and they evinced the liveliest curiosity about the soldiers. It was ascertained that there were about 1,000 armed Kachyens in the neighbourhood, most of whom had flintlock muskets.

Muskets.

Kongsehaing having signified his consent, the column advanced to the mines, which are in the hills, about 1,500ft. above the Uru river and some 2,500ft. above the sea. The mines consist of a series of large open pits. The pumping apparatus is very primitive, and most of the pits were flooded. A great portion of the stone extracted is white and valueless. A great portion of the stone extracted is white and valueless. The green veins so highly prized by the Chinese run through the white stone. With improved appliances the quantity of jade extracted could be vastly increased. Captain Triscott and his followers are the first Europeans who have visited these mines. In 1836 Dr. Bayfield visited some jade mines in the contract of the state of the st Upper Burma, but they were in a different district and are now worked out and abandoned.

The column only remained at the jade mines for three hours before returning to Mamsa. It then proceeded to the Endawgyee lake, which it described as a beautiful sheet of water, eighteen miles long by six wide, surrounded by pineclad mountains, 6,000ft. high. The distance from Mogoung to the mountains, 6,000rt. high. The distance from Mogoting to the Endawgyee lake by water is 110 miles, and the river is navigable for large boats or launches. The country along the river was found to be very sparsely inhabited, and the districts round the lake are in a distressed condition. Years ago the country was severely ravaged by the Woontho Tsawbwa to suppress a rebellion which had broken out against the Burmese Government of the part of this ment, and it has not since recovered from the effects of this

In the Shan States Kon-San as Tsawbwa will be acknow-ledged Tsawbwa of a portion of Theinnee. Although he has no hereditary claim to it, he is a man of energy and ability and is in actual possession. He has now no hope of Chinese assistance, and will probably become thoroughly loyal to the British. The Chief of Maingyee, now at Port Stedman with Mr. Hildebrand, Resident in the Shan States, will probably be installed as Tsawbwa of Southern Theinnee.

marching for Mandalay, quelled a civil war in Maingyee which threatened to assume serious dimensions and spread to other States. Some excellent surveying and exploring work has been done by Captain A. C. Yates, attached to this column, in the districts along the eastern bank of the Salwen, which were hitherto unknown.

As the Shan chiefs are showing a willingness to rally to the British, and the country is quieting down, it is desirable on many grounds that the northern and north-eastern frontiers of Burma should be delimited at an early date by an Anglo-Chinese Commission. It wil probably be necessary to establish a protectorate over the Trans-Salwen Shan States. The Chinese Government does not claim them. If they are left to themselves they will continue in a state of anarchy and prevent the pacification of the Cis-Salwen Shan States, which are now British territory.

SIKKIM.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 18.

The latest telegraphic report from Sikkim states that the whole of the expeditionary force, with the exception of the detachments of Pioneers stationed in advance at Renock, Rugli river, and Dolopchen, was concentrated at Pedong. The force numbers in all 2,000 men. On Friday last the troops commenced their march for an attack upon the Lingtu fort, with the object of compelling the Tibetans to vecate the place and retire into Tibet. The advance is to be made slowly, so as to enable the Tibetans to retire without forcing the Government to commence military operations. The garrison is reported to be anxious to negotiate for a surrender.

Lingtu is only 40 miles from Darjeeling, and the Tibetans have but to retreat seven miles through the Jalapla pass to reach Tibet. Lingtu is over 12,000 feet above the sea level, and the Jalapla pass is 1,700 feet higher, with precipitous mountain paths all the way across. The first part of the route follows the Teesta river. Very wet weather was encountered by the 13th Bengal Infantry in this part of the march. The weather was afterwards, however, more favourable.

The Government is most anxious to avoid hostilities with Tibet—not from any regard to the Tibetan authorities, who have acted throughout in the most insolent, arrogant, and aggressive manner, but solely with the view of cementing as far as possible our existing friendship with China. China, however, quite recognises the fact that we have been very patient and long-suffering in this matter, and that were we to continue to sit quiet under this attempted annexation of Sikkim by Tibet in all probability we should before long be compelled to take defensive measures to protect Darjeeling itself from invasion. Were it not for our alliance with China we should in all probability punish the Tibetans by making an advance upon Lhassa; but unless 'they compel us by continued aggression to advance on Lhassa we shall content ourselves with the occupation of the Lingtu fort and with adopting precautionary measures for the defence of the Sikkim frontier on the side of Tibet.

Mr. J. Sanders Slater, B.A., barrister-at-law, acts as Professor of History and Political Economy, Elphinstone College, in the fourth grade of the Educational Department.

A LITTLE time back some particulars were published of a scheme for working the Eastern and Northern Bengal Railways in combination with the Darjeeling line, with Mr. Franklin Prestage, the Manager of the last named concern, at the helm. The scheme has fallen through. A proposal for bringing one of the lines named, the Eastern Bengal, under the management of the Bengal Central Company, has been made from home; but this again appears to find no favour with the Government of India.

A LITTLE Native paper, the Telagu Mitra, the organ of the lower grades of the Medical Service, has a very appreciative and well-written article on Surgeon-General Moore, from the point of view of the medical subordinates. From the higher ranks of the profession to the lowest, Dr. Moore seems to have won nothing but golden opinions, and he will everywhere leave pleasant memories behind him. He did all he could as Surgeon-General, says the Telagu Mitra, to protect the interests of his subordinates, whether Assistant Surgeons or of the hospital assistant class, and was always ready to protect their independence against the encroachments of local boards and municipal authorities; he put an end to the unnecessary transfer of hospital assistants from one end of the presidency to the other, and facilitated the arrangements for leave, ever earning for himself the sympathy of his subordinates. Dr. Moore's career is certain to be widely discussed before he leaves India, but no notice is likely to be more gratifying than this simple record of the affectionate regard in which he is held by the subordinate officers of his department.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

HOW TO WORK MUNICIPALITIES. (Englishman.)

Immediately after his assuming the Chief Commissionership of the Central Provinces, Mr. Mackenzie evinced a strong interest in Local Self-Government; and his second year's review of the fifty-nine Municipalities under his sway shows that these bodies may be trained to wonderful performances by a duly proportionate use of whip and rein. Here is an example of the way the rein is used:—"Mr. Mackenzie has had opportunities of meeting many of the Municipal Committes, and has been struck with their general shrewdness and capacity, with the interest which most of them take in municipal affairs, and with the evident value which is set upon the privilege of membership. He is satisfied that, in most towns, the Committees are now composed of truly representive members in every way qualified to look after local interests, and that, ere long, if District Officers do their duty as counsellors and supervisors, a sufficiently high standard of performance will generally be secured in all the more important centres." Under such skilful encouragement, it is positively asserted that town after town can boast of a clean appearance, well-kept roads, garden-like [squares, and improved drainage and admirable conservancy. But the Chief Commissioner can also use the whip. He tells the Committees that their reports are not punctual, and that if they do not mend their ways in that respect, the dreaded District Officers will pay personal attention to the matter. Two of the largest Municipalities had deteriorated instead of improving, but a hint in season made them "take up their workwith renewed energy." Some Committees spent their time in wrangling, and neglected their duties; others were too extravagant; one was guilty of harshness towards some sections of the community; others took too much on themselves, and did not consult the Public Works or the Civil Surgeon; they are all disposed to set up unnecessarily large establishments. Regarding these and other forms of edministration for which a town or locality is found not to be ripe;" and

THE INDIAN RESERVES BILL.

General Chesney's Bill providing, in technical language, "for the government, discipline and regulation of Her Majesty's Indian Reserve Forces," is a model of brevity and clearness. It simply sets forth the fact that the Reserve now being formed from the Native Army shall be divided into "active" and "garrison" portions, of which the latter will be called upon only to serve within the limits of India, and enumerates the three offences and their punishments under the Act. Briefly, if an officer or soldier in the Reserve fails to attend the place to which he is summoned, or fails to comply in any other way with the order which recalls him to the ranks, or fraudulently obtains pay contrary to the regulations, he will be liable to imprisonment on conviction by a court-martial or a Magistrate. These provisions are only fair and reasonable, for the State cannot afford to pay what is really a kind of pension to Reservists without being empowered to enforce the terms under which such payments have been accepted. If a man can show "reasonable excuse" for noncompliance with orders, he would not, of course, be punished. The splendid discipline which obtains throughout the Native Army will probably render any application of the law very rare indeed, for the Indian sepoy is the most docile soldier in the world, and his warlike instincts are such that he will, if in the Reserve, hasten to join his old colours not only with alacrity but with enthusiasm. Until the introduction of the Reserve system a year ago thousands of men after four or five years' service "cut their names" and returned to civil life: they were, with few exceptions, excellent soldiers, but they were lost to the Army absolutely, as not even a record of their residence was kept. Now this very class of men will have the same opportunity of leaving, in order to look after their private affairs; but instead of cutting themselves absolutely adrift, without pension, from the Army, they can pass into the Reserve, receiving a small monthly "retaining fee" in return come as smart as when they left their regiments, instead of raw recruits who take two or three years to learn their duties. General Chesney said the Reserve system is peculiarly adapted to the circumstances of the Indian Army, because adapted to the circumstances of the Indian Army, because that Army is composed in a great measure of men drawn from the agricultural population, who ordinarily live in their villages ready to be found and who will themselves be glad to accept the system. The original idea that the Reservists should be on the footing of men on unlimited furlough and that their legal status should not be in any way affected, has been wisely abandoned. No harm can possibly come from a Reserve Act such as that now before the Legislative Council, and the precedent of the English Act fully justifies its introduction. duction.

LOSS OF ANIMALS IN BURMA. (Times of India.)

(Times of India.)

From a veterinary point of view, the campaign in Burma has been fruitful of lessons, and Mr. Steel in an article in the new number of the Quarterly Journal of Veterinary Science in India very appropriately brings these together, his résumé of facts being interesting and instructive. The great loss of horses in Burma was, everyone knows, not due to the fighting, but to peculiar climatic conditions and to the exigences of service of a very special kind. Bad as matters were, however, they showed a considerable improvement as compared with our previous wars in Burma, the history of which Mr. Steel, from his own special point of view, sums up in the laconic formula, "Veterinary staff, nil; fatalities of animals, 100 per cent." In the recent campaign veterinary officers were to the fore, though the recent campaign veterinary officers were to the fore, though the supply was very far from being adequate. The blanks were apparently filled up anyhow; "ignorant men," writes Mr. Steel, "scraped up from the lines of pensioned sowars and camp followers, were supposed to be in veterinary charge, drawing the pay which ought to have gone to men who knew something at least of animals and their diseases." At the very out-set of the waranimals died wholesale in some stations, elephants even succumbing, the loss of each of these being about equi-valent to the pay of a veterinary surgeon for six months, a fact which is certainly a grim commentary on the system of false economy adopted. The mortality amongst all classes of animals at last became so great that a special veterinary investigation was ordered, this duty being entrusted to Mr. Steel. It was found that a special febrile disease was working most of the mischief, and at many of the stations terrible defects of the mischief, and at many of the stations terrible defects in feeding and in hygiene were also discovered. Microscopic examination showed that the prevalent malady was surra, a then little known disease of a febrile nature characterised by relapses and invariable fatality, due to an organism in the blood described as a spirilloid. Some facts, Mr. Steel tells us, stood out prominently with regard to this equine scorrege:—
It always followed exposure in the jungles and bad hygiene; it assumed the character of enzootic fatality in September, and deaths began to become few in March and April: it seldom deaths began to become few in March and April; it seldom affected animals during their first year in the country; and was specially infrequent in animals watered from rivers. Only the ponies of the country appeared capable of withstanding this insidious disease. Mules for a time seemed to stand against it, but at length they, too, began to succumb. The disease known as kumree was also rife among the horses more especially and not so much among the smaller equines. Altogether, during the past three years the loss of animals in Burma has been enormous, and the veterinary officers have had an anxious and an arduous time of it. However, important lessons have been gained for the future, and the sum total of our knowledge in regard to Indian veterinary diseases has been considerably increased. The veterinary staff certainly have a grievance in that none of their number were mentioned in the Burma honours' list. They bore their full share of the burden and heat of the day, and official recognition would have been but a very slight recompense for their invaluable services.

AN EXTRAORDINARY AFFAIR.

The following paragraph, from Indian Engineering, has been going the rounds of some of the Indian papers. "The been going the rounds of some of the Indian papers. "The following curious telegram from Mandalay appears in an upcountry paper:—'Mr. Crawford, Supervisor, Public Works, and five contractors, natives of India, wait their trial in Shwebo Jail for conspiracy to murder Mr. Simpson, Executive Engineer, Shwebo, on the way to Kyoukmyoung, on the river-bank. Fortunately the plot was discovered through the agency of an office peon."

Mr. Crawford, writing to the Mandalay Herald on the subject, says:—"The following are the facts. The office peon in question, and several others with him, who were inimical in question, and several others with him, who were inimical to me and the five natives of India mentioned as being in jail hatched this charge among themselves, and, I believe, made the Executive Engineer believe it to be correct. The police thereupon took action, and arrested me with several others. I was placed in a military guardroom, and the five Natives (four being contractors and one my clerk) put in the police jail, the latter man with leg irons on him. On being arrested, I asked who had preferred the charge, but was told that I could not get the information. I was not allowed to speak to anyone, or to write or receive telegrams or letters. I saw the D.S.P. on two occasions, and asked him when I was to be brought before a magistrate, and he told me the police inquiry had not yet ended. No bail could be accepted. I was three days in a hambon quarter-great and then folling very ill (having been bamboo quarter-guard, and then, falling very ill (having been on medical certificate and under medical treatment when arrested), was removed to the military hospital, where I was arrested), was removed to the military hospital, where I was treated with the greatest kindness and consideration by Dr. Bell. On 13th January, 1888, bail for Rs. 1,000, in two sureties of Rs. 500 each was asked, and provided. I was then called up, on 16th January, 1888, and the Deputy Commissioner told me that I was released. No charge was preferred, and no form of court gone through, nor witnesses called. The five men who were also in the jail were released, but did not get free for some two days after. Several other men who had worked under me as contractors or maistries on the Shwebo-Kyoukmyoung road, were also arrested and locked un for Kyoukmyoung road, were also arrested and locked up for different periods, and released. Many were intimidated by different periods, and released. Many were intimidated by the threats, beating, offers of rewards, and of good employment, &c., if they would only tell—what? putting it mildly, a lie, in order to convict us under section 506 of the LP.C. Myself and five others had, in the meantime, to be kept in durance vile (for in hospital I had a guard over me) until it pleased the police to finish its inquiry—I should have been allowed to see a magistrate at least forty-eight hours after arrest, but this was denied me—nor would bail be accepted. It was 20 days before I was allowed to come before the Deputy Commissioner, and was then immediately released. I was, therefore, altogether 117 days under confinement. The other five men were 22 days in jail, and, all being caste men, suffered great privations. The time of this occurrence was very unfortunate for me, since the Chief Commissioner and Superintending Engineer were daily expected—and I who had borne the heat and burden of the day for close on two years in the district, and had done downright good work to boot under anything but favourable circumstances, was locked up as a the district, and had done downright good work to boot under anything but favourable circumstances, was locked up as a felon, under a false charge, hatched by a lot of Native malicious blackguards. I hope the above may meet the eye of the Chief Commissioner, and humbly trust that he will cause the strictest inquiry into the case, or a half-dozen Natives will be able to swear away the lives of officials from whom they fancy they have received ill-treatment, acting in their official capatity."

THE ILLEGITIMACY OF MAHARAJA DHULEEP SINGH.

THE ILLEGITIMACY OF MAHARAJA DHULEEP SINGH.

Captain Andrew Hearsey writes to the Tribune as follows:

"It is much too late in the day for anyone to call in question the legitimacy of Maharaja Dhuleep Singh, nor could the Field Officers, who have recently been discussing the question in the columns of the Standard in England, be very well up in the laws of their own country regarding legitimacy or illegetimacy. If I am not much in error, the law of England holds, if a married woman produces a child during the time she is actually cohabiting with her husband, or even within a reasonable time after she has cohabited with him, and her husband, knowing the child not to be lawfully begotten of his body, condones any "laches" on the part of his wife, and continues to cohabit with her, he actually legitimizes such child, and such child, if the eldest in law, would succeed to any title that he (the putative father) might possess, and also to any entailed property; or if the only child, to the whole property to the exclusion of all others. Maharaja Runjeet Singh not only acknowledged the legitimacy of Dhuleep Singh, but what is more, appointed him his heir, so, whether he was the son of a Jat trooper, or of a Muzbi sweeper, it does not much matter, although in former days amongst old Indians the rumour neither spoke of this Jat trooper nor Muzbi sweeper, but ascribed the paternity of Maharaja Dhuleep Singh to a bhistic with whom the Maharani Chunda had an intrigue. Maharani Chunda was a second Catherine of Russia—she was never without a favourite. At one time it was Raja Lal Singh, the head of the Toshakhana, who, for his influence with her was deported to Deyrah; then it was Sirdar Prema Singh, Commandant of the troops of the Maharajah of Jummoo, who was likewise deported by Sir Henry Lawrence, and kept a close political prisoner for twenty-two years in the Fort of Allahabad. But, as I have shown, these facts do not interfere one iota with the main point, that is, the legal legitimacy of her son, Maharaja Dhuleep Singh

THE DEPUTY SURGEON-GENERALSHIP OF

BOMBAY.

The Times of India gives the following on high authority:—

"Your local contemporary states that the Surgeon-Generalship with the Government of Bombay was offered first to Brigade-Surgeon Carter and then to five other officers, who declined. This is incorrect. The Deputy Surgeon-Generalship was offered to the officers named, viz., Brigade-Surgeons Carter, Langley, Hunter, Dymock, Sexton, and Hojel; but this was contingent on the interpretation of the age rules, and it was decided by the Government of India that all the gentlemen named, excepting Dr. Hojel, were disqualified under the age rules, as none of them could serve the full period of five years. Brigade-Surgeon Hojel is the only officer declining proyears. Brigade-Surgeon Hojel is the only officer declining promotion, so that your contemporary's little fable of the emoluments of private practice, deciding the officers named to decline, has no foundation. It is only in very exceptional instances that the gains of practice are sufficient to bias an officer. Very erroneous ideas prevail as to the gains by fees of army doctors in India, which probably do not average each man Rs. 50 a month, taking the services all round."

A well-informed correspondent writes as follows on the same

A well-informed correspondent writes as follows on the same subject:—

"There appears to be a good deal of misapprehension in regard to the vacant post of Deputy Surgeon-General. It was offered in succession to the following five officers:—Brigade-Surgeons Carter, Langley, Hunter, Dymock, and Sexton. All of these were, by the age regulations, eligible to hold the appointment for three years, but not for the full period of five years. Such service would have earned only half of the extra pension for the five years' service. Under these circumstances, the five officers named declined the appointment. Dr. Hojel, who stands next in seniority, was capable of holding the appointment for the full term, but, as you announced yesterday, he has also de clined. Of course, to doctors, such as Brigade - Surgeon Langley, with large private practices, acceptance of the appointment would have been of the nature of an 'Irish rise,' as it would have involved removal to Sind and the relinquishment of their practices."

It has already been announced that Mr. Paul and Mr. Bernard returned from Guntuk on Monday, after having had an interview with the Raja of Sikkim. It appears that they experienced very inclement weather on their journey. It is believed the Raja is callous to advice, and that his influence among his people is declining. The Lingtu mountain is covered with snow, and the Thibetans still hold the stockade.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICE AND THE PENSION QUESTION.

CALCUTTA, FEB. 26.

A large meeting of the Uncovenanted Service Association was held yesterday evening. Sir Alfred Croft, who occupied the chair, said that at the last meeting an objection was taken to the grounds on which their claims to sterling pension were based. It was suggested that the legal right which was put forward should be abandoned for the moral right, and that as an alternative pension they should ask for an increase to the rupee pension. The subject had since been considered at two committee meetings. He hoped the proposition which would be put forward would be accepted unanimously.

Mr. Rowe proposed the following resolution:—In 1831 the court of directors of the East India Company sanctioned pensions at the rate of one-third and one-half the pay of the Uncovenanted officers. By the rules of 1855, while the claims of officers appointed under the former rules to pensions varying from £500 to £1,200 were fully recognised, the pensions were limited in the case of persons appointed after 1855 to £500 for officers in receipt of over a thousand a month and to £400 for those whose pay ranged from Rs. 700 to Rs. 1,000. In these rules sterling only was mentioned. The Secretary of State, in a despatch of Dec., 1862, at which time no serious fall in exchange was anticipated, agreed to pay the amounts in England at the official rate of exchange fixed annually. In the adjustment of accounts between India and England, this notification was omitted from the several authorised copies of the Civil Pension Fund since 1862. In the various orders issued by the Secretary of State and the Government of India respecting pensions, these orders were summarised in the Government pensions, these orders were summarised in the Government Resolution of July, 1870, which was printed in the Civil Pension Code of 1876. In this, while the salaries were stated Pension Code of 1876. In this, while the salaries were stated throughout in rupees, pensions were almost invariably expressed in sterling. In the edition of the Code for 1879, prefixed to orders of July, 1870, the following note for the first time appears in 1879: "The rate of exchange had for some years been below two shillings." Note wherever in the following re solution pension is stated in sterling the equivalent in rupees is meant at two shillings the rupee, which had been at that time for several years the fixed rate of exchange for the adjustment of financial transactions between the Imperial and the Indian Government. This interpretation of what was then clearly the intention of Government, coupled with the fact that in all previous orders pension limits had been generally expressed in sterling, has naturally created in the minds of the Uncovenanted officers a reasonable expectation that on retirement to Europe they would able expectation that on retirement to Europe they would receive their pensions at the sterling rate of two shillings. Under the present condition pensions drawn at home have fallen by 30 per cent. and are liable to a further depreciation. The meeting therefore desires to emphasize the unanimously expressed views of the association regarding the serious loss and distress caused by the fall in exchange to officers retiring to Europe under the painful uncertainty as to the amount of their future income, and expresses the hope that Government will adopt measures to save retired officers from disastrous consequences, either (1) by paying them pensions at the rate of two shillings, or (2) by fixing the rate at not less than the official rate of exchange of the year (when the officers entered the service, or (3) by so increasing the amount of the rupec pension as to compensate for the fall in exchange pension as to compensate for the fall in exchange

Mr. Rowe said that it would be seen that they had absolutely dropped any insistance of their supposed right being their legal right to claim pension in sterling. They had made an appeal for help from the employers, who had suggested three alternative methods. Referring with regret to his Excellency's approaching departure he said it was accentuated in the case of the Association by the widespread belief that his Excellency had recognised their grievances. He felt special interest in the palliation of their distress.

Mr. R. Buckley moved as an amendment that in consideration of the fact that up to a comparatively recent date notices issued under the authority of Government have represented the rupee as about equal to two shillings, and in consideration of the serious depreciation of its value, which has led to grievous loss to officers retiring to Europe, this meeting earnestly hopes the Government will adopt such measures as earnestly hopes the Government will adopt such measures as will remove the painful uncertainty that at present exists as to the amount of all future incomes by paying the pensions in Europe and the Colonies in sterling at a fixed rate, and the meeting is of opinion that the rate fixed should be two shillings. He thought it would be most impolitic to put forward the argument which had already been specifically answered in a particular case.

Messrs. Wickes and Olding supported the amendment, which was carried by a large majority.

Dr. Blaney argued that the Town Council had departed from their rules in granting to Mr. Walton two kinds of leave in unbroken succession. On the other hand, it was urged that the Town Council had acted quite in accordance with the rules. Dr. Blaney's proposition was become ance with the rules. Dr. Blaney's proposition was, however.

Spitta, barrister-at-law and senior member of the Punjab Bar, Mr. Macauliffe's charges against Mr. Browne, and the latter's against the former, have been withdrawn. Mr. Browne has also retired from the case for maintenance against Mr. Macauliffe, and the complainant has filed the following petitition in Mr. Silcock's Court:—"The humble petition of a complainant, Mussainmat Rahiman, alias Buri, respectfully showeth (1) that the complainant on the 17th inst., through her pleader, Mr. W. E. Browne, filed a claim against Mr. Macauliffe for maintenance for her children; (2) that she now withdraws all claim against Mr. Macauliffe; and (3) that she herself presents this petition, and requests that the proceedings be dismissed.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.-MARCH 13.

Mr. Slage moved a resolution declaring that the frontier policy of the Government of India is producing grave financial difficulties in that country, leading not only to increased taxation but to the extension of the sale of intoxicating liquors for revenue purposes, with serious results to the moral and intellectual welfare of the people. In support of his motion he dilated at considerable length upon the policy of the Indian Government in connection with the defence of India on the Afghan frontier, pointing out that we had already spent upwards of £50,000,000 in establishing ourselves in a corner of Afghanistan, and contending that this was only a small sum compared with what it would be necessary to spend if our present policy were continued.

Mr. Caine, in seconding the motion, complained of the increase of drinking habits among the Indian people, and accused the Government of unduly fostering the excise revenue. He advocated a Royal Commission to inquire into the subject, upon the same basis as the inquiry which had revenue. He advocated a Royal Commission to inquire into the subject, upon the same basis as the inquiry which had recently been held in Bengal.

Lord R. Churchill took exception to mixing up the drink question with so important a subject as that of frontier policy, and, dealing only with the latter, denied that the expenditure in the construction of railways, bridges, and roads, &c., was unwise or unproductive. It had been incurred, he said, for the necessary defence of our Indian Empire, and not in an aggressive spirit, and he looked at it with the greatest satisfaction. At the same time, he realised the serious position of aggressive spirit, and he looked at it with the greatest satisfaction. At the same time, he realised the serious position of Indian finance, contending that taxation resources were practically exhausted, and that there was no way in which the revenues could be materially increased. The remedy, he suggested, was that of retrenchment and economy, which he thought might be easily effected, having regard to the lavish expenditure for administrative purposes, which, he showed, had increased by nearly £8,000,000 in fifteen years. There had also been great extravagance on unproductive works and in also been great extravagance on unproductive works, and in respect to these, as well as in regard to the expense of administration, he urged the House to insist upon economy; and warned it, moreover, that expenditure on Indian frontier defence must of necessity depend in a large measure upon our

After some remarks from Sir G. CAMPBELL,
Sir J. Gorst, after complimenting the mover and seconder of the motion upon their success in including two distinct subjects in their motion, denied the charges brought against the Indian revenue officials of stimulating drunkenness among the natives, and explained the nature and extent of the works which are being carried out on the Afghan frontier. These which are being carried out on the Afghan frontier. These, he remarked, were merely intended to remove temptation to invade British India, and these works, as well as the political changes which have accompanied them, had considerably improved the relations of the native tribes of Afghanistan with proved the relations of the native tribes of Afghanistan with the Government of India. As to the speech of Lord R. Churchill, he said it would no doubt be most salutary to the Government, but he thought he had taken too gloomy a view of the financial condition of India though he admitted it called for the most serious consideration. As to the stimulus to the Excise revenue complained of by Mr. Caine, the principles on which the Government of India acted had long been laid down and were perfectly intelligible; but the application of them must depend on local circumstances, as to which the House of Commons was not in a position to judge. But he assured the House that the fear of a general increase in drunkenness in India was altogether groundless. ness in India was altogether groundless.

Mr. S. Sмітн appealed to the House to express an opinion

Mr. S. SMITH appealed to the House to express an opinion in favour of local option for India.

Sir R. Temple repudiated the notion that the administrators of Iudia had any other object in view in connection with the Excise than to limit the consumption of alcoholic liquors. The increase in the revenue in recent years was due mainly to the increase in the price of liquors, and the increase in sales to the prosperity of the country, but he denied that there was any general increase in drunkenness in India. Turning to the frontier question, he maintained that the policy of England now, as it always had been, was to insist upon the frontier boundary being observed, but he denied that we had any desire to go beyond it. He emphatically expressed his disbelief in any intention of going to Candahar, and as Russia, Afghanistan, and ourselves had agreed upon a frontier line, he doubted the necessity of keeping up so large an army in India as had been maintained in the past. As to the financial question, he denied that the Indian people were poor in an economic sense, or that their capacity for taxation was exhausted.

Sir U. KAY-SHUTTLEWORTH asked for an assurance that the Government had no intention of pushing the Quetta Railway to Candahar, and heartly welcomed Lord R. Churchill as a recruit to the ranks of Indian economists.

Mr. J. Maclean protested against our interests in South-East Europe and the Mediterranean being abandoned in the interests of India.

Sir E. Hamley, reviewing the circumstances under which a Russian army could invade India, and describing the position of the intrenched camp proposed to be created, heartily approved this frontier policy, which he believed would insure tran-quillity to India for many years to come, and by it alone India could be retained by us.

Mr. Brych had no fear of an Indian insurrection, but believed the natives would loyally support us in resisting an invasion. Turning then to the evils of the excise system in India, he objected to the introduction of spirits and opium into Burma, as their introduction would be sure to result in vices which would not be compensated by the comparatively small additional revenue it would bring.

Sir J. Fergusson, adverting to the frontier question, denied that the construction of a well-designed defence would be construed as a menace by a neighbouring power. He admitted that there had recently been an increase in the expenditure on the frontier railways, but insisted upon the necessity of completing what our officers considered essential for our Indian Empire.

Mr. Childens said he would have supported a motion confined to the drink question, but as this resolution impngned a policy with regard to the Indian frontier which Mr. Gladstone's Government had upheld, he should vote against it.

Sir R. LETHBRIDGE rose to speak, upon which Mr. CAINE moved the closure. This was agreed to, and, on a division being taken on the motion, it was negatived by 122 to 72.

MARCH 14.

INDIAN PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION.

Sir R. LETHBRIDGE asked the Under-Secretary for India (1) whether the appointment of the Public Service Commission was stated by the Government of India to be preparatory to a further inquiry into Indian affairs; (2) what had been the total cost of that Commission, including the salaries of its official members; (3) how many officers of the covenanted (Civil Service, bow purp officers of the special or technical omicial members; (3) now many officers of the covenanced Civil Service, how many officers of the special or technical departments of the Civil Service, and how many European officers of other uncovenanted departments had seats on that Commission; (4) and whether the Government intended to initiate legislation on the recommendations of that Commission, initiate legislation on the recommendations of that Commission, without further independent inquiry.

In the absence of Sir J. Gorst,
Sir J. FERGUSSON said,—(1) My answer to the first paragraph of the question is "Yes"; (2) the cost cannot be ascertained from information at present in the India Office; (3) the Commission was composed of six covenanted civil servants, two High Court Judges (one a native), five natives, and two unofficial persons; (4) the Secretary of State will take no action on the report of the Commission till he has received the views of the Government, by whom it is being now considered

INDIAN FRONTIER RAILWAYS.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked the Under-Secretary of State for India what had been the expenditure from the Indian Exchequer during the last three years on frontier railways and military works on the north-western frontier.

In the absence of Sir J. Gorst,
Sir J. Fergusson said: From the information now in the India Office, Rx.8,500,000 is the best estimate that can be made at present. This must not, however, be relied on as made at present. absolutely accurate.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN INDIA.

Mr. CAINE asked the Under-Secretary for India what was the total revenue derived from intoxicating liquors in British India for the years 1884-5, 1885-6, 1886-7, and also the number of prosecutions for illicit distillation throughout British India for each year since 1871-2. In the absence of Sir J. Gorst, Sir J. FERGUSSON said: The revenue was, in 1884-5—Customs, Rx.401,000; Excise, Rx.2,803,000—Rx.3,204,000; 1885-6—Customs, Rx.417,000; Excise, Rx.2,923,000—Rx.3,340,000. The returns for 1886-7 have not yet been received. The second question cannot be answered from information at the India Office, Excise offences being all lumped together in the returns.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE "E" and "F" troops of the Surma Valley Light Horse were inspected on the 18th February at Kannyhatti by Sir F. B. Norman, commanding the Eastern Frontier. The strength on parade was thirty-eight sabres. After a thorough inspec-tion in manœuvring and a close examination of arms and accoutrements, the General, addressing Captain Balfour, who was in command of the squadron, said he was very much was in command of the squadron, said he was very much pleased with the general appearance of the men and horses; the latter we: extremely steady, and the manœuvres wer executed in good style. The non-commissioned officers when called out showed a good knowledge of their duties, and the only thing to complain of was that there were so few present. The calibre of the Volunteers of 1888 he considered quite equal to those in General Havelock's time, and, should they be remired they would be adoubt render as good an account. quired, they would, he had no doubt, render as good an account of themselves as they had done in that distinguished leader's

The animal seemed very careful of Government property; for it had only lost one stirrup in three months of wild life.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL J. R. C. MARTER, commanding the Gwalior District, will be placed on retired pay on March 27th, 1888, under the age clause of the Royal Warrant.

COLONEL JOHN HILLS, Royal (late Bombay) Engineers, has been permitted to retire from the Service with effect from Dec. 31st, 1887.

HOMEWARD BOUND TROOPSHIP "SERAPIS."-The much detained troopship Serapis, on her second voyage out this cold season, was to sail homewards on Tuesday morning, March 6th, in command of Captain F. R. Boardman, Royal Navy. She carries in all 65 officers, 16 ladies, 14 children, 784 rank and file, 26 women, and 61 children, proceeding to Aden and home in course of relief or on leave and duty. Of this total number 18 officers and about 600 mem, women, and children, belonging to the 2nd Battalion of the East Yorkshire Regiment and other details, will be left at Aden, the rest proceeding home. The two detachments of the East Yorkshire, stationed at Ahmedabad and Deesa, arrived in Bombay and island their head guarders about the middle of this worth joined their head-quarters about the middle of this month, and the other drafts from the sister presidencies, after having assembled at the army head-quarters, arrived in Bombay by specials and landed at the Sasson Dock yesterday morning. A part of them embarked on board the Trooper yesterday, and A part of them embarked on board the Trooper yesterday, and the whole number will be embarked early this morning, with the only exception of the families of the Yorkshire Regiment, who have been detained in Bombay on account of some cases of small-pox having revealed themselves amongst them; but will be despatched to their destination at an early opportunity. The Yorkshire L.I. proceeds to Aden (its locum tenens being the Gloucestershire Regiment) to relieve the Batallion of the North Staffordshire Regiment stationed there, and about to proceed home by the same ship. The latter Regiment, known as the Prince of Wales or 98th Foot, after having served in Her Majesty's Mediterranean ports and elsewhere, arrived in India in Sept., 1880, and subsequently, on Dec. 2, 1886, proceeded to Aden, having been told off for duty at that port. The E.Y. Regiment, on arrival at the last-mentioned port, will be distributed in three different positions, its headquarters locating in Cantonments, and the two detachments taking up positions at Isthmus and and the two detachments taking up positions at Isthmus and Steamer Point respectively. The North Staffordshire, embarking at Aden, will number 18 officers, 6 ladies, 5 children, 574 rank and file, 11 women, and 28 children. These, it is supposed, on their arrival at Portsmouth will be despatched for location at their regimental headquarters at Lichfield.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.—The headquarters and five companies of the 28th Regiment Bombay Infantry are to move at an early date by rail from Baroda to Poona, and be temporarily located in tents at New-Jhansi, where the regiment will eventually be engaged in building new lines. Camp equipage to accompany the corps. Families to remain at Baroda for the present. All arrangements for the move are to be carried out by the General Officers Commanding Northern and Poona Divisions and Bombay District in communication with each other. Until the arrival of the 5th Bombay Light Infantry, the duties at Baroda are to be carried out by the remaining company of the 28th Bombay Infantry and the Depot of the 5th Bombay Light Infantry. 5th Bombay Light Infantry.

There are some beings born into the world to play the part of kind, good-natured, straightforward, honest folk; everyone of kind, good-natured, straightforward, notes that, 'cotylone loves them, everyone respects them, everyone clings to them. They are the centre of every group where trouble is rampant and distress the order of the day; and yet, withal, their life is a desolate waste. They "live, and move, and have their being," a desolate waste. They "live, and move, and have their being," always anxious to assist and ready to console; but no one ever dreams that such persons themselves need pity or comfort. It never enters the imagination to suppose that these "kind old things," as the world calls them, have aspirations such as fall to the lot of poor, ordinary mortals; and so they pass on to their long account unheeded, unnoticed, and un-understood. stood.

Such a character was Major Lawrence. He is presented to the reader as the centre of gravity amidst an indiscriminate mass of humanity, partly good, partly bad, partly indifferent. He flies from England to India, and from India to England, but only to find the skein of events as entangled as when he quitted the scenes which filled him with despair. The young have grown old and the old have become older; but as Time, the solver of problems, solves one difficulty fresh complications arise, and the "end thereof" seems as far off as ever. And so "Johnnie" pursues the even tenor of his ways—loving and loved, loving yet not loved. This enigma forms in part the plot of the work, with its phantasmagoria of characters and multiplicity of characters.

And what is to be the verdict as to the merits of Miss Law-less's tale? It is difficult to say. That there is considerable merit is not to be denied; but there is, on the other hand, such an embarrass de richesse in the way of sayings and doings that a sense of confusion is at times almost inevitable. Instead of sense of confusion is at times almost inevitable. Instead of driving carefully a carriage and pair there seems a team of capering, unsteady, untrained steeds, who jump and gambol in every direction. They at times perplex old "Johnnie," and his example is followed by the reader who wishes the talented authoress would settle down a bit. In the language of the old stage coach days we would say, "Steady, steady, miss;" and when next Miss Lawless retraverses the path of fiction we would gladly travel more quietly more plainly, with less dash would gladly travel more quietly, more plainly, with less dash and more caution, with more care and less pace.

EMINENT WOMEN SERIES.—HANNAH MORE.†

Whatever may be the failings of the present generation— and they are neither few nor far between—ignorance is not likely to be included in the category, for there is nowadays a book on everybody and everything. Foremost in the way a book on everybody and everything. Foremost in the way of general instruction is Messrs. Allen's most admirable "Eminent Women Series," which brings before the readers the memories of the past, and relates the story of the struggles and the triumphs of England's most illustrious daughters. The subject of the present memories Hannel More—a star in the subject of the present memoir is Hannah More—a star in the firmament of renown universally admired, but not so universally understood. "Her excellence and devotion have in a manner," says Miss Yonge, "obscured her fame, and the many who are inclined to take her as an impersonation of what is impertinently called 'goodiness' have no idea of her talents in the society she had enjoyed." This is most true. Nine people out of ten picture Hannah More as a venerable. what is impertinently called 'goodiness' have no idea of her talents in the society she had enjoyed." This is most true. Nine people out of ten picture Hannah More as a venerable, pious old lady, wandering amidst the humble homes of her humble neighbours—teaching, preaching, exhorting, comforting. This is, perhaps, true; but it is only half the truth. She was much more than a mere "goody-good." A brilliant writer and accomplished essayist, she was a centre of thought and a prominent figure in society. The friend of Garrick, Horace, Walpole, Johnson, et hoc genus omne, she could not have been a mere ordinary conversationist whose utterances were confined to village gabble or local scandal. But foremost of all she was, as Miss Yonge rightly observes, a "pioneer," teaching the great lesson that her sisters in this mighty world could and should take the front rank as regards the religious education of the poor; showing by example and practise that the lighter forms of religious literature were fitting mental food for the toiling, struggling sons of toil in their daily endeavour to live by the sweat of their brow; and, lastly, shedding an ennobling influence by her treatises on education, morals and religion. This, in outline, is the lesson of Hannah More's life. But we must not close the volume without a word of commendation for the skill and acumen with which Miss Yonge has painted with a loving hand the picture of "eminence," and told the story, from infancy to the sere and yellow leaf of eighty-eight summers, of as noble a pattern of poor mortal humanity as ever found peace and glory in the regions of

THE INCREASE OF CANCER IN ENGLAND.*

The death-rate from consumption has materially decreased during the last decade, and the mortality from cancer has equally increased. Why is this? Dr. Churchill has investigated the subject, and embodied the results in a pamphlet just issued. We do not pretend to follow the writer in his diagnosis of the two ailments, and of the causes which link the two inseparably as twins; but the matter is one of supreme interest, and we feel it our duty to draw attention to a remarkable pamphlet on a subject which comes home to most families in the land with irresistible force and horror.

THE FURTHER TRAINING AND EMPLOYMENT OF MOUNTED INFANTRY.

Everything nowadays seems called by a new name. There is no longer for instance such a thing as a butcher—the worthy now poses in the nineteenth century as a purcher—the worthy now poses in the nineteenth century as a purveyor of meat; and the same spirit pervades every branch of the mercantile community. So, in military matters, we learn of "Mounted Infantry." In old-fashioned times these would have been designated Cavalry; but it appears the two things are totally distinct and different, and Colonel Parr devotes an entire breakers to available the use of the novel things are totally distinct and different, and Colonel Parr devotes an entire brochure to explain the use of the novel experiment in the annals of war. Having had personal experience in South Africa during 1880-81, this officer is enabled to speak with an authority which few of his comrades in arms can command. The work is plain, concise, and thoughtful, and possesses the inestimable advantage that "many of the recommendations put forward have been practically tested on service."

THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL REVIEW.‡

The first number of this new venture augurs well for the success of the enterprise. Local antiquities abound in every county in the kingdom, and it is right and proper that there should be some centre of archæological inquiry. Mr. Lawrence Gomme has written a few words explaining the aim and object of the journal, and if the motto ex uno disce omnes hold good in this direction a long and brilliant career is likely to good in this direction, a long and brilliant career is likely to fall to the lot of this latest bantling of the Victorian era.

We have received from Messrs. Longmans, Green and Co copies of "Social Habitations," by the Rev. J. G. Wood, and "Wonders of the Tropical Forests," by Dr. G. Hartwig. Little need be said in praise of the text, for the writers are both authors of wide repute. They have both of them devoted their attention almost exclusively to subjects kindred to those on which these volumes touch, and their authority is absolutely unimpeachable. The illustrations, too, are more than excellent, they are beautiful; the type is clear, and the paper excellent. We are unable to pick a hole, and we abandon the attempt in despair. despair.

THE Municipal Commissioners of Bangalore discussed the "Note" written by Sir Henry Prendergast, R.E., Officiating Resident, Bangalore, relative to the aid the Munipality of Bangalore proposed to give to General Fischer's project for supplying that town with water. The Board resolved that they should, as suggested by the Resident, wait for the opinion of the advisers of the Madras Government on the project, which will come before them shortly.

THE Madras Harbour Trust Board, in reply to their appeal to Government protesting against the high rate at present charged by the South Indian Railway Company for the conveyance of material for the Harbour Works, have been informed that, considering the large capital outlay that has been incurred in the realignment of the extension from the Egmore Station to the Beach and in the construction of 100 iron Station to the Beach, and in the construction of 100 iron wagons for the harbour traffic, the rate at present charged for the conveyance of stone from the Pallaveram quarries to the Beach, viz., 1 anna per ton, per mile, is nothing but fair and reasonable.

INDIA IN PARLIAMENT—MR. SLAGG'S MOTION.

ALL who are honestly interested in the stability and prosperity of our great Indian empire are in a considerable measure indebted to Messrs. Slagg and Caine for the discussion which they raised in the House on Tuesday last regarding the motion brought forward by the former. Neither gentleman is possessed of very exhaustive or very correct information on Indian questions, but fortunately both caused much valuable information to be elicited from others who were in a position to give it, but who cannot often get a hearing on Indian topics in Parliament. Honourable members as a rule care little for such topics. India is a land too distant, and to them too dull, to excite interest which must be divested of all party feeling. It must have been therefore rather an agreeable surprise to many Anglo-Indians to read on Wednesday morning in their Times the very full debate which followed on the motion of the hon. member for Burnley. That motion was certainly not devoid of party spirit; it was indeed a bitter attack against the Government delivered, as Lord Randolph Churchill justly said, with "partisan ferocity." The confused method of attack displayed in the wording of the motion was as comical as it was cantankerous. Mr. Slagg. we are told, rose to move "That, in the opinion of this House, the unwise frontier policy of the Government of India is producing grave financial difficulties in that country, leading not only to increased burdens of taxation. but to the extension of the sale of intoxicating liquors for revenue purposes, with serious results to the moral and material welfare of the people." How any frontier policy, wise, or unwise, could lead to the extension of the sale of intoxicating liquors, Mr. Slagg did not explain, but this part of the motion gave Mr. Caine an opportunity to unburden himself of much teetotal eloquence, to which the House listened with more patience than even the orator himself had possibly expected. But he also failed to explain what the Frontier policy had to do with the opening of liquor shops in Bengal, where, according to his information, "a large number of people, young and old, were found often in a high state of intoxication, singing ribald songs, and making all kinds of noises—a condi- J tion of things such as one might expect to find in an uncontrolled public-house in the lowest slums of London." Sir John Gorst thought that the mover and seconder of the resolution before the House were to be congratulated on their ingenuity in framing a resolution in such terms as enabled two perfectly distinct subjects to be mixed upin debate, the connecting link between those two subjects--the revenue—having nothing to do with either of them.. Lord Randolph Churchill also contributed to this snubbing by telling the member for Barrow that the excise laws required to be debated "with sanity and common-sense,. and not with the heat and acrimony which the honourablemember imports into every discussion when alcoholic: drinks are concerned." If all the honourable members who spoke had followed this advice the discussion would have been narrowed to the most important issue-the present state of the finances of India, and the pressure which has been, and is still being, brought to bear upon them. To go back, however, into questioning past policy connected with our relations with Afghanistan was of little good. Liberal and Conservative administrations must share between them the blame or praise--according to contending critics regarding that policy. It may now be developing itself into a wise one, but it has certainly had to contend with many difficulties to reach sohappy a consummation. Whatever be the statesmen's views on the subject, the historian must record that from the very beginning our relations with Afghanistan have cost us millions of money, and, more precious still, the incalculable loss of thousands of precious lives. But if out of misfortunes safety to the Indian Empire is to arise from the adoption of the compromise which Mr. J. M. Maclean spoke of as having now been accepted between the "forward" and the "standstill" policy, cavillings and recriminations may be allowed to cease. But if further extension of our frontier defences. are required, we join in the hope expressed by the hon. member that the question whether the cost should be borne by the people of India or by this country should be considered by the House of Commons. It was all very well for Sir Richard Temple to say that the resources of civilisation in taxing India have not yet been exhausted. Perhaps not; but they have been strained very hard, and the very fact that the present Finance Minister of India has had to fall back on an increased salt duty to replenish his diminishing exchequer is an ominous sign that the finances of India are not altogether of that elastic nature which certain optimists declare. Lord Randolph Churchill spokecloser to facts when he said, "I think the financial difficulty in India at the present time is most grave. I doubt whether it could well be graver, and I am certain that that question ought to receive without delay the careful and concentrated attention of this House." And again, "Youhave positively got to the end of your tax ition, what with an increased expenditure, owing to the necessity for an increased military force, with increased expenditure for defence of the frontier, and to the annexation of Burma, and with an increased expenditure owing to the fall in silver."

Such is the situation, but the way to meet it is not to seek for fresh methods of taxation, but to introduce an immediate and rigid economy—in fact, a strict policy of retrenchment. But it is not the Government in India only which must learn that lesson of economy. There must be a policy of retrenchment nearer home also, although upon that point point honourable members were particularly silent.

THE FRONTIER, ETC., DEBATE.

WE have given elsewhere our own observations on this highly important but very much mixed subject; but we subjoin here a few remarks by an Anglo-Indian contributor (W. M. W.), who is well acquainted with most of the topics treated of .- [ED. A.I.M.]

He writes:-"Before I make any remarks of my own on the above subject let me quote from a private note just to hand certain comments by an experienced British politician, who, though not claiming any special Indian knowledge, is one who sees further through a deal plank or Parliamentary debate who sees further through a deaf plank of Farhamentary debate than can most folk:—

"What muddle is that which has ensued by the mixture of the two motions of Messrs. Slagg and Caine? One has studied the Frontier subject (and to good purpose, as I admit); the other the drink question. Then they appear to have combined their information, after the manner of Dickens's Chinese metaphysican.

"But the point of the debate lies in the word Frontier.

We poor simple English people fancy that the Indian Frontier is the river Indus, or its right bank; so we are pleased to hear that all our fortifications are to be within our frontier, hear that all our fortifications are to be within our frontier, and thus our apprehensions were allayed. Then we find it has been removed far beyond the Indus! So we are fain to ask, Where is it now, and what security is there for its not going still further West?

"There is one important point on which I think the muddlers are wrong, and that the so-called "Scientists" could show themselves right. I mean the granting of assistance to the Afghans—if they ask for it—against Russian invasion. To guarantee the Afghan frontier, to go beyond our own unasked, ought to be out of the question; but after all the mischief we have done the Afghans; we ought to do something in return for their alliance against Russia. I do not believe that Russia can do anything against us in India without its forming an alliance with the Afghans, and that aided by an Indian Russia can do anything against us in India without its forming an alliance with the Afghans, and that aided by an Indian insurrection. Russia prepares for the latter by provoking constant and excessive increase in our Indian expenditure; but this we could put an end to by our abrogating the declaration of Paris (of 1856, which purports to exempt belligerents' produce from capture at sea). While that remains England is Russia's tool, and Russia's is England's enemy."

Our contributor goes on with his own comment. "The most serious delusion propagated during the debate by the official speakers and their backers is that which consists in speaking of the frontier in quite other than its real physical and political sense, as it has hitherto been regarded. The persistency with which this misrepresentation was maintained indicates design, and the device was certainly disingenuous. Sir Richard Temple had to perform the feat of swallowing his Minute of Temple had to perform the feat of swallowing his Minute of 1868; and he did this more suo at one gulp, when, with shameless audacity, he said—" We are advancing to our own frontier, less audacity, he said—"We are advancing to our own frontier, and we have not; advanced an inch beyond it, but we have steadily kept within it."

"Then Sir John Gorst—who knows nothing about "the countries adjacent to India" (to adopt Thornton's title), even less than Sir Edward Hamley, who made one stupendous blunder in speaking of "a great plain extending from the lower right bank of the Indus up to Kandahar"—gravely informed the House that "these works were carried out entirely within our own dominions of British India"—these works being the first fortified outposts and permanent camps at within our own dominions of British India ——these works being the first fortified outposts and permanent camps at Quetta and Pishin, the military roads from the Punjab across by Thull Chatioli, and the eight or ten millions worth of purely military and unproductive railways through the Bolan Pass and round by Hurnai through the Alps of Beluchian all of which are fer beyond the real boundaries of India and all of which are far beyond the real boundaries of India, and as such are in defiance of all the matured convictions of the

"The key to this delusion or misrepresentation about the Indian frontier may be found in the reply given by Sir John Gorst in the early part of the same evening to the member for Aberdeen, when he referred to the Treaty of Gundamuk, on which figment is founded the purely imaginary or arbitrary line on the map, which, in utter disregard of physical geography and political facts is now attempted to be foisted on the British public as the boundary of British India. This delusion, on what it is now deliberately attempted to base a burn theory of political and military alient health and a political and a polit huge theory of political and military policy has little more relation to fact than has the amusing error of the Times reporter who made Sir Richard Temple speak of the railway "running across Mesopotamia one of the richest districts of India."

THE P. AND O. STEAMSHIP "OCEANA."

What may be characterised as the finest ship that has been seen in what may be characterised as the linest sinp that has been seen in any of the London docks left on her first voyage to Australia on the 9th inst. The new steamer Oceana, the latest addition to the fleet of the P. and O. S. N. Co., is of a gross tonnage of 6,362 tons. She is the largest vessel constructed in Ireland, as she is the largest merchant ship, with the exception of the Great Eastern, which has been in a London dock. Her extreme length over all is 482ft., beam 52ft., and depth of hold 37ft. For the last week she has been loading and predepth of hold 37ft. For the last week she has been loading and preparing for sea in the Royal Albert Dock, and has presented one of the finest sights of naval architecture that there is afloat. Indeed, both externally and internally, the builders, Messrs. Harland and Wolff, of Belfast, appear to have strained every effort to make the ship a success in every way. The Oceana has most luxuriously appointed accommodation for 241 first (carried in the fore part) and 156 second (in the after part) saloon passengers, for whose comfort every device that modern ingenuity can suggest has been employed. The saloons are designed by Mr. D. W. Colcutt, architect to the Imperial Institute, and the ladies' drawing-room is a perfect marvel of elegance. The first saloon (on the upper deck) and companion is all done in light oak, with occasional dark oak panels, the ladies' room being white picked out with gilt. The smoking saloon is on the after part of the hurricane or spar deck, so that no inconvenience to ladies and non-smokers can-occur. The deck, so that no inconvenience to ladies and non-smokers can occur. The spar deck is spacious, and should prove a luxury in hot weather. The second saloon is of Spanish mahogany, and is far superior to the first saloons of most steamers. This is on the upper-deck likewise, and there is a making allows and proved a constant of front the first saloons. saloons of most steamers. This is on the upper-deck likewise, and there is a smoking-saloon and promenade separate from the first-class on the spar deck. The smoking-saloons in both cases are arranged not only for comfort, but convenience for a rubber or other game, the tables being so placed. The sleeping cabins are unusually commodious, and the fittings are most ingeniously contrived to occupy the smallest possible amount of space. Throughout the vessel Crosby's patent spring beds and patent folding lavatories have been adopted, and the result is a great economy in the matter of elbow-room—no small consideration where, as in a cabin, the proportions are necessarily much retrieved. The senitary arrangements are very complete both much restricted. The sanitary arrangements are very complete, both in regard to the ventilation of the vessel, for which there is a special in regard to the ventilation of the vessel, for which there is a special engine in the engine-room, and other important particulars; while the marble baths, lavatories, &c, with their luxurious appliances, form a noticeable feature in this, as in other vessels of the P. and O. Company. The ship has scuttles everywhere and not ports, but the scuttles are of exceptional size, so that much air is admitted, whilst the light is far greater. Throughout the interior the Oceans is lighted throughout with electricity and is fitted with two sets of dynamos and apprings see the one Throughout the interior the Oceana is lighted throughout with electricity, and is fitted with two sets of dynamos and engines, each one capable of lighting the entire ship. In addition to a total of nearly 600 incandescent lamps there is a powerful search light for use during the passage through the Suez Canal, whilst another powerful light, controlled from the bridge, is hung between the main and mizen masts, and can be lighted immediately should any mishap occur in the passage through the Canal at night. A noticeable feature in the dynamos is the low rate of speed at which they run—namely, less than 200 revolutions per minute. In each cabin there is a switch, so that the passengers can turn the light on or off at will at any hour of the night. The whole of the installation has been carried out by Messris. The whole of the installation has been carried out by Messrs. Crompton and Co., of Chelmsford. There are lamps everywhere in The whole of the installation has been carried out by Messris. Crompton and Co., of Chelmsford. There are lamps everywhere in case of accident, but as there are two sets of engines and dynamos this should hardly occur. In the after end of the vessel there are fresh water tanks, capable of holding 180 tons of water, formed partly of the side of the ship, and by a second skin inside. There is a tank on deck capable of holding 1,000 gallons, which is filled by a special pump from these reservoirs, and thence supplies all parts of the ship where fresh water may be required. The whole of the after part of the ship is a vast refrigerating chamber, capable of carrying 5,000 carrases of frozen sheep as cargo, besides providing for a supply of fresh fish, milk, butter, vegetables, and delicacies of every description for the use of passengers at sea. In fact, no live stock is carried. There is not a pen for sheep, ducks, fowls, or any kind of live stock on the ship. Everything, including a supply of fresh milk, sufficient to last the whole way to Australia, will be put into the refrigerating room.

Of the engines it is difficult to speak unless going into technical details. The engine-room to an unprofessional mind seems to be a confused mass, and it is only on examination that the marvellous manner everything is placed shows to advantage. The main engines are inverted, direct acting, triple expansion of 7,000 indicated horse power. There are numerous auxiliary engines for feeding the boilers, pumps for a variety of purposes, compound electric, bydraulic, arefrigerating engines besides an engine for twe in case of fire, which power. There are numerous auxiliary engines for feeding the hollers, pumps for a variety of purposes, compound electric, hydraulic, and refrigerating engines, besides an engine for use in case of fire, which leads direct to the hydrants, placed with their hoses above them in all parts of the ship. Some idea of the size of the main engines may be gathered from the fact that each of the three cranks weighs eleven tons. Steam is supplied by six double-ended boilers constructed as is the vessel herself of steel. Each boiler, which has six furnaces, has hear rected to 300 lbs per square inch but, the working pressure will been tested to 300 lbs. per square inch, but the working pressure will be about 180 lbs. The shaft tunnel is unusually commodious, and be about 180 lbs. The shaft tunnel is unusually commodious, and affords ample room for seeing that everything is right. Across the forward end of the engine-room stretches the refrigerating machinery, which has been supplied by Messrs. A. and S. Haslam, of Derby.

The Oceana has four masts and two funnels. She is square rigged on the fore and main masts, whilst the main and jigger are pole masts only. She has the latest improvements in the way of side lights, fitted in lighthouses, &c. The vessel possesses an unusually large number of boats, comprising eight lifeboats, one launch, one cutter, one mail boat, and one gig. All these boats are carried in the new fashion on the rail ready for immediate lowering, whilst in addition there are two large collapsible boats. The working of her cargo is expeditiously and noiselessly performed by the latest system of hydraulic gear from the works of Messrs. Sir W. G. Armstrong, Mitchell, and Co., of Newcastle-on-Tyne. Similar power is supplied to the winches for hoisting sails, on-Tyne. Similar power is supplied to the winches for hoisting sails, lessened by subdivision into numerous watertight compartments. The steam steering gear is much farther aft than usual, so that the lead of the chains is shortened, and is, moreover, direct. The Oceana is on the Admiralty list as an armed cruiser, and has been fitted accordingly under the supervision of the Admiralty. She is capable of on the Admirately list as an armed cruiser, and has been interfaced accordingly under the supervision of the Admiratty. She is capable of carrying 1,200 troops on her lower decks, and would be admirably adapted for a transport. She already has her gun platforms fitted. We may conclude our account by stating that Captain Hector, R.N.R., the commodore of the P. and O. Co.'s fleet, is in command. Wr. Tocque, the chief of the state of the chief officer, and the five other officers of the ship, are likewise officers in the Royal Naval Reserve, whilst ten reserve men are carried as quartermasters, so that the ship will probably leave London flying the

A sister ship, the Arcadia, lately launched by Messrs. Harland and Wolff, will follow in about two months, completing the "Jubilee fleet" of four similar vessels for the company, the first two of which, the Victoria and Britannia, have already distinguished themselves by the rapidity of their voyages to and from India and Australia. Messrs. Caird and Co., of Greenock, have in hand two additional vessels of large capacity and great speed for this Company. They are to be named the Peninsular and Oriental, and are expected to be ready for the outward passenger season in the ensuing autumn.

TRADE OF BRITISH INDIA.

A Blue-book has just been issued, entitled "Statement of the Trade of British India with British Possessions and Foreign Countries for the five years 1882-83 to 1886-87," which illustrates the development of trade in India. The most interesting item to our readers is the cotton yarn, where we find the exports increased from 45,378,040 lbs. in 1882-3 to 91,804,244 lbs. in 1886-7, the great bulk of which goes to China and Japan. The reasons for this great development are stated by Mr. O'Conor to be that while the cotton which the Bombay mills spin is grown almost at their doors, the same cotton has to pay a by Mr. O'Conor to be that while the cotton which the Bombay mills spin is grown almost at their doors, the same cotton has to pay a freight on a transport of 7,000 miles to England and back again as twist to China, the principal customer, and besides labour is cheaper in India. Until recently the freights between Bombay and China were so heavy as almost entirely to counteract the advantage derived by Bombay from the difference of distance, but that has now been altered. A combination of steamer companies demanded a freight charge to China of Rs. 15 a ton; a reduction was made to Rs. 12, but an Italian line stepped in and accepted freight at Rs. 8, and now the average is only Rs. 5. In addition to this immense advantage, the Port Trust charges on cotton yarn and cloth, as well as on the coal and machinery required for the mills, were largely reduced during the year. The millowners of Bombay are pushing their trade in other directions beside China and Japan, and in some cases are displacing the once popular American shirtings, and also the products of the Lancashire looms. In another article we shall refer to other features of this Statement, especially as they bear upon the shipping interest.

Information of the death of the Rev. T. J. Smith has been received. The news was telegraphed to Madras from Colombo by a fellow-passenger of deceased. Mr. Smith came to India in 1884, as Secretary to the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge, and also for the last three years had ministered to the spiritual wants of the immates of the Military Corphan Acrel was a few secretary to the Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge, and also for the immates of the Military Orphan Asylum. He was of a delicate constitution, and it was expected that the climate of India would benefit it. A year after his arrival in India the reverend gentleman lost his young wife, and, though his health had been better than while in England, he since became quite an invalid. A short time ago the advice of his friends induced him to take a short sea voyage, and he proceeded to Ceylon. Mr. Smith leaves a son and a large circle of friends to lament his loss.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRIOR SIXPENOR

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its stifl of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

ing weekly on regimental badges and instory. Inustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Milltary Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinon is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Sorvice Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is sumplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the Frensh, Russian, and other Government, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng'and regarding Military affairs.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Etatesman, October 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-banded, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name—J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sen e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout to career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE CP INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Yoice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian ceople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value trourmaints and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

MONDAY, MARCH 26, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 9th March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 7th March; and from Calcutta to the 6th March.

At the meeting of the Viceregal Council on March 2 the Indian Army Reserve Bill was explained by General Chesney, and then passed.

At the annual meeting of the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce Mr. Steel delivered a long address, reviewing the financial and commercial history of the past year, and paid an eloquent tribute to the high character and achievoments of Lord Dufferin's Administration.

THE Kashmir season this year will open earlier than usual, on account of the Viceroy's visit. His Excellency is expected at Murree about April 3.

CAPTAIN EVANS GORDON, of the Foreign Department, goes to Kashmir temporarily as Assistant to the Resident during the Viceroy's visit.

THE annual exodus to the hills is taking place somewhat earlier this year. The Governor of Madras was to leave for Ootacamund on March 22nd, and the Lieutenant of the Punjab goes to Simla in the middle of May.

THE Lord Bishop of Calcutta takes five months' leave from April 1st.

THE Mahommedans of the Punjab have held several meetings to express their confidence in Lord Dufferin, and their regret at the announcement of his early retirement.

Mr. J. G. CORDERY, C.S.I., Resident at Hyderabad, shortly takes furlough for four months. Mr. A. P. Howell will officiate for him.

The Public Service Commission's Report has been published. The Commission recommends that competitive examinations for candidates for the Covenanted Service should take place in London as heretofore, and approves the suggestion that the limit of age should be raised from nineteen to twenty-three.

The Punjab Famine Code is now before the Government of India, which has also recently been considering the code for the Bengal Presidency. The other Governments which have preferred to have codes of their own are Bombay and Madras, while the North-West Provinces and Oudh Government has also its own code under preparation.

One result of Sir Charles Elliot's visit to Orissa is that he has thoroughly satisfied himself as to the carrying capacity of the Coast Canal being equal to any famine exigencies. Thousands of tons of grain per day could be poured into Orissa by this channel.

SIR ALEXANDER WILSON has been elected Chairman of the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce.

The Calcutta Chamber of Commerce have warmly supported the proposal for accelerating the railway mail service between Bombay and Calcutta.

COLONEL WOODTHORPE, R.E., who has been placed on special duty for the purpose of compiling the report of Colonel Lockhart's expedition to the Hindu Kush, will, it is understood, eventually succeed Colonel Bell as head of the Intelligence Branch in India.

ALL doubts regarding the fate of the European soldier who was missing after the attack upon Licutenant

Stewart's camp in the Saichal Valley have been set at rest by the discovery of his headless body near the encamp-

ANOTHER raid across the Chittagong border is reported, the marauders being the Shendoos, who come from the Arakan hills to the south-west. The party crossed the border on the 15th February, and attacked a small village, killing three men and a woman, and carrying off nine men and fifteen women captives. The remainder of the villagers, about thirty, escaped into the jungle. Mr. Shuttleworth, Assistant Superintendent of Police, repaired to the scene promptly, and took up the pursuit, but failed to come up with the raiders, though some Natives who followed saw them and exchanged shots. It appears that these Shendoos have no connection with the tribesmen who murdered Lieutenant Stewart; but a succession of these occurrences may have the effect of setting up a general agitation along the frontier, which at the present season would be difficult to deal with.

CAPTAIN GRIESBACH, the Geological Survey Officer who has entered the service of H.H. the Amir, arrived at Jellalabad on the 10th ult.

A NEW scheme for the reorganisation of divisional brigade and station commands will probably be issued in the spring.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab left Sibi for Quetta on the 1st inst.

CAPTAINS MASON and Wahab, with the Gomal survey party, have returned to British territory after penetrating only a few miles into the Pass. Tribal jealousies and disputes seem to have caused their return.

H.H. THE MAHARAJAH HOLKAR has lately married a second wife, a young lady fourteen years of age. His first Rance has borne him a daughter, but no heir.

WITH reference to Reuter's announcement that Sir George White is to take up a Brigade command at Aldershot, it is said that the statement may be correct, but that it does not refer to any immediate transfer. Sir George remains in Burma for another year.

The members of the Sone Canals Commission are now in Calcutta considering their Report, which was to be in the hands of the Bengal Government by the 15th inst. at latest. The recommendations of the Commission are likely to be of a somewhat radical character, their special feature being the advocacy in important particulars of the Italian system of irrigation working as designed by Count Cavour, with due adaptations to the circumstances of South Behar.

THE Boundary Commission escort on the way back to India arrived at Kush Robat on the 22nd February. It will march viâ Farrah and Kandahar to Quetta.

The Kashmir State Railway, the construction of which has just been sanctioned, will run from Sialkot to Jammu, a distance of nearly twenty-five miles. It is estimated to cost $12\frac{1}{2}$ lakhs, and it is to be completed with the utmost possible despatch by Major-General De Bourbel, Engineer to the Durbar. Some eight and three-quarter miles are in British territory. Kashmir finds the whole of the capital, receiving 4 per cent. on that expended upon the British section. The whole line when opened will be worked by the North-Western Railway for five years. The Durbar, according to the agreement, will receive 1 per cent. on the Jammu section, plus half the net earnings above this. The line will be broad gauge, and land required for it will be given free of charge. The Maharaja, with suite and servants, will enjoy the privilege of making two special journeys annually without any payment, so as to enable him to visit India readily.

MR. CHARLES HILL, Public Prosecutor, North-West Provinces, having taken an extension of leave until October next, Mr. G. E. A. Ross will continue to officiate for him until that date.

MR. F. ATKINSON, in charge of the Currency Department in Calcutta, has been appointed to act for six months as Assistant Accountant-General in the Military Department.

THERE was an error in the recent statement that Colonels Beville, Humfrey, and Forteath, of the Bombay Staff Corps, who complete their term of command during the current year, would have to retire from the service. So far from this being the case they are not only eligible for superior commands, but under strict injunctions from the Secretary of State, they have a preferential claim to such Army Staff appointments as may become vacant.

THE Maharajah of Durbhunga, K.C.S.I., has subscribed Rs. 1,000 per annum during the last three years to the funds of the Theosophical Society. A Madras paper says he recently offered, in a telegram to Colonel Olcott, to "pay Rs. 25,000 in cash, in the place of Rs. 1,000 yearly subscription." Colonel Olcott proposes to invest this sum in Government promissory notes, keeping it as a separate account, to be called the "Durbhunga Fund."

Mr. F. C. Daukes, who acted as Secretary of the Public Service Commission, has taken three months' privilege leave, after which he will probably be appointed Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, Assam.

A CONFERENCE, consisting of ten members representing the ten different railways in India, will be held at Simla, in August, to discuss the several important questions connected with railways.

At a special meeting of the Calcutta Wheat and Seed Trade Association it was unanimously decided that the terms of the agreement recently entered into by the exporters for penalising deliveries of dirty wheat and linseed should be embodied in the Association's contract. The chief Native sellers approved of the new clause.

THE Secretary of State having sanctioned a Financial Commissionership for United Burma, probably Mr. Fryer, Commissioner of Mandalay, or Mr. Smeaton, Chief Secretary, will get the appointment.

HIS HIGHNESS THE NAWAB OF TONK has addressed a Kharita to the Viceroy, placing at the disposal of Government his army and all the resources of his State for the defence of the north-west frontier.

H.H. THE MAHARAJA OF JHIND was installed on the 26th ult. by Mr. Lyall.

THE MAHARAJA OF RUTLAM was invested with the insignia of the Order of the Indian Empire on March 2 by Sir Lepel Griffin.

OBITUARY.—Lieutenant J. Grant, Bengal Sappers and Miners, at Roorkee; Lieutenant G. V. Moore, Scottish Rifles, at Shahjehanpore; Lieutenant A. Pritchard, 2nd Battalion Lincolnshire Regiment, at Meerut.

Several washingsfordiamonds have been made by Mr. Lowenski at the Hyderabad diamond fields, but as yet without success. The Mining Company, however, has some reason for consolation by the indications of the existence of gold in the Raichore Doab.

Appropos of the Punjab University scandal, the Lahore paper learns that some precautionary rearrangements are being carried out in the subordinate establishments. Five clerks have been discharged, the first three receiving three months' pay in lieu of notice, and the remaining two one month's pay. The post of head-clerk has been abolished, and a sub-committee has been appointed to reorganise the duties and salaries of the establishment to be attached to the Registrar's Office.

RUSSIA is pouring into India not soldiers, but petroleum. From data which have just reached Odessa from Batoum, it appears that during the last year fifteen steamers were chartered to India, and the total amounted to 908,543 casks. The greater part of the shipments to India were sent direct to Rombay, the remainder to Calcutta and Madras. That the last year's export has given an impetus to trade is sufficiently proved by the fact that during the last month of the current year shipments amounting to 250,000 casks were carried.

NOTES.

It is satisfactory to learn that Lord Dufferin's Administration in India has met with the approval of all classes of the community in Calcutta with the exception of the Babú scribblers who write diatribes against all English rule in the columns of the Native papers. It would, however have been no less satisfactory to have learnt that his Excellency leaves the finances of India in a sound and flourishing condition. The telegrams giving the Budget statement do not permit the indulgence of such a feeling, but give cause rather for some anxiety. How the increasing expenditure of India is to be fairly met is now a problem which will require all the abilities of the coming Viceroy and his financial advisers. But unless English opinion can really be brought to bear upon the matter there is little chance of any true improvement taking place.

If we are now perfectly secure in India from any foreign invasion; if we have gained the affections of the great Fendatory Chiefs, and succeeded in winning the confidence of the Afghans, then perhaps the money which has been spent, and which has still to be spent, on frontier defences and strategic railways ought not to be grudged or a Budget deficit cavilled at. Even if the Russian ghost, which has troubled the waking dreams of so many soldiers and statesmen, be laid at last, much good will have been done, and the alarmists might now rest and be thankful.

A MILITARY contemporary hints that we may possibly have another annexation—that of Kashmir, to visit which State Lord Dufferin is now going. The wish is possibly father to the thought, for no Englishman who has visited Kashmir can have helped regretting that that beautiful country was not under British rule, which would bring prosperity to the unfortunate people who have so long suffered under Native tyranny. But badly as the Kashmir Government has done its duty in administration we could hardly find an excuse which would bear justification to annex the country. But the Government of India is doing a great deal to make British influence felt in the Happy Valley. Lord Dufferin's visit will do some good, and if the Maharaja is induced to see that a merciful and liberal rule pays even commercially better than tyranny and extortion we may gain all we want without giving offence or umbrage. Tact and a little gentle pressure, such as Lord Dufferin knows well how to use, will work wonders.

ALTHOUGH it is not probable that Sir Lepel Griffin will be invited by Lord Dufferin to harangue the Maharaja of Kashmir in open durbar, there would be no harm in permitting the Maharaja to peruse and ponder over Sir Lepel's address to the Maharaja of Rutlam when investing him with the insignia of the Order of the Indian Empire. The following, if a little high flown, might give a hint to the ruler of Kashmir worth his taking:—

The idea of Divine right, repudiated by the sentiment of civilised Europe, has taken refuge with barbarism in Russia and in the Native States of Asia; but the time is coming when it will have to leave these last strongholds. The past history of the world has belonged to princes and slavery; the future is for the people and for freedom. The time will come when the enlightened judgment of humanity will no longer tolerate the idle, cruel, and sensual prince, who looks upon his people as objects of plunder, and who outrages with impunity everything that he should regard as sacred, and neglects every obligation which he should fulfil. In the new world which is coming there will be no place for rulers such as these, who will disappear before advancing civilisation as wolves and tigers retire from the cultivated plains to the jungle. The only princes whom the conscience of the world will tolerate are those who rule on principles of enlightened virtue, and whose security will be found in the goodwill of their people.

This is very good; but are there no States and rulers besides barabic Russia and Native India that the lesson inculcated might be useful to also? A WELL-KNOWN Radical paper of the worst character, but possessing a great circulation, has the audacity to publish the following:—

Lord Lytton, our ambassador to France, is "going it" in the true Simla fashion in Paris, as was predicted by us when the scandalous appointment was made by Lord Salisbury. The Viceroy's Court in India became a veritable Oriental harem during his tenure of office, and the morals of the Anglo-Indian community—bad enough as they are at best—sunk to the level of the Court of Versailles under the lechery of Louis XV., that "well-beloved" prince, and the management of Madame Dubarry, his ennobled procuress. Will the history of that degraded period be repeated at our Embassy in the Rue St. Honoré under the trained ministrations of the author of "Lucille," and that still more sensuous poem, "The Portrait?"

The atrocious mendacity of the libel may render it beneath the contempt of the parties libelled, and so pass unnoticed. But if Lord Lytton or some other "Anglo-Indian" took action upon it the result can hardly be doubted. A term of imprisonment with wholesome labour would do the writer of the paragraph a world of good.

THE Bombay Gazette gives hopeful intelligence to the

The European members of the Uncovenanted Service in India are not, we believe, likely to see their agitation for a redress of their pension grievances pass without result. We have reason to believe that the Secretary of State has agreed to a conventional rate being fixed for the drawing of their rupee pensions and furlough allowances in England. The rate will probably be one and eightpence to the rupee. The information, which comes to us on excellent authority, points to a compromise with which the Service will not be greatly dissatisfied.

THE Times of India says in announcing the death of Colonel Rivett Carnac:—"He was not only a gallant and enthusiastic soldier, passionately fond of his profession, but he was a thorough military student. Excepting perhaps General Macgregor no man knew more of the difficult questions connected with our frontier policy. The Sepoys owed a debt of gratitude to him for the earnestness with which he contended that the widows caused by the Afghan war should receive a pension. The employment of retired Sepoys as commissionaires was also a movement which owed its birth and success in a great measure to his zealous advocacy. He had the unusual knack of cosmopolitan sympathy, and his death will leave a blank in many circles not apt to be moved by sudden changes. He was, in a word, a likeable man. Colonel Carnac's friends in this country had no reason to suppose that he was dangerously ill. When he wrote last he was in the middle of an important work, the "History of the Indian Army."

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 25th.

I have just received the Budget statement. The following is a summary of its salient points:—It is the financial statement for 1888-89, and is published in the form of a minute by Mr. Westland. It first briefly refers to the causes which obliged the Government in January to seek for improvements in the revenue to the amount of nearly Rx.2,000,000, and to the financial discussions which then took place in the Council. It announces that the result of the accounts for 1886-87 was a surplus of Rx.178,427, after charging off Rx.325,626 on account of special defence works. The differences from the revised estimates explained to Parliament in September had alreay been for the most part published in India in April.

alreay been for the most part published in India in April.

The revised estimates for 1887-88 show a deficit of Rx.2,448,000, without counting the special defences expenditure, amounting to Rx.5,69,000, the result being worse than the estimate in the Budget by Rx.2,464,000. Of this amount Rx.1,059,000 are a charge for anticipated interest, explained by Sir J. Gorst to arise from the conversion of 4 per cent. sterling stock; Rx.830,000 represent the excess of army charges for Upper Burma, and Rx.710,000 the fall in the exchange to about Is. 49d. The fall in the opium revenue is made up by improvements in the other principal heads of revenue. The loss under the head of railways is met by savings in expenditure and by better receipts. It is explained that the revised estimates are based upon the actual transactions of eleven months and a moderate estimate for March. The transactions of March are on such a large scale as to afford room for considerable variations, which cannot be completely known till about the end of April.

The Budget estimates made up at the same rate of exchange

The Budget estimates made up at the same rate of exchange —1s. 4'9d.—show almost the same result as was anticipated in the estimate of the financial position presented to Council on January 27th—namely, a surplus of Rx.423,000. The revenues given in the estimates show the year's advance over the standard then based on the estimates for 1887-88. This advance is absorbed by continued additions to the army expenditure, arising from the augmentation of the forces; Rx.824,000 being provided for extra military expenditure in Burma. Against the surplus of Rx.423,000 is the expenditure on special defences, which are this year to be pushed with great vigour, and which will involve an expenditure of Rx.1,121,000—half in England—and including these charges the deficit is Rx.698,000.

Rx.698,000.

Mr. Westland reviews in detail the state of revenue and expenditure under each of the main heads, giving an account of the progress of the land revenue, the administration of the excise revenue, the first year's operations in connection with the income-tax, the condition of railway finance, and the burden of the debt. His summing up is as follows:—

"Our finance is a strange blending of elements which we can regard with feelings of certainty and confidence, and of large outlying uncertainties over which we have no control. If we look at those heads of revenue and expenditure which depend on our own administration we have every reason to be

"Our finance is a strange blending of elements which we can regard with feelings of certainty and confidence, and of large outlying uncertainties over which we have no control. If we look at those heads of revenue and expenditure which depend on our own administration we have every reason to be satisfied. The land revenue, salt, stamps, excise, and customs are elastic and progressive; the post-office, the telegraphs, the forest, and all the quasi-commercial departments are more remunerative every year; the civil and public works expenditure is well under control, and the railways afford a certain and advancing income. The only difficulty connected from a financial point of view with the account of their revenues is their vastness. In transactions such as these a 5 per cent. increase or decrease in the earnings makes a difference of a million each way in the accounts. These are elements of satisfaction and comparative certainty.

"On the other side, we have Rx.8,500,000 of revenue, namely, the opium revenue, liable to be adversely affected—and at the present moment it is adversely affected—by China's increasing competition with other nations. We are obliged by our military position to take a share in the policy of armaments, which, willingly or unwillingly, the great European nations have been driven to adopt. Finally, and more directly affecting us, is the uncertainty of silver. The fall in its value seems temporarily arrested; but no one can say how long we shall have a respite from the progressive increase of our burdens which this fall has hitherto imposed upon us. The charges for famine are to be regarded, though it is certain that through the extension of railways famine can be combated at a smaller outlay.

"The question of Indian finance, therefore, is the question whether, in the face of all these uncertainties, our margin is sufficiently large. The security of our present financial position depends upon the estimate. Though these special bur dens cost us net Rx.31,74,000 in the particular year 1888-89 it is sufficient in average years to provide only Rx.24,76,000. The present scale of expenditure in Upper Burma and on special defences is practically certain of early reduction, although it is possible that famine charges and exchange may add to the expenditure as much as we are in other directions relieved of. We have adopted a high standard in measuring our financial obligations, and can point with some confidence to the recuperative power shown by our revenues, and to the fact that their natural increase, much more than any special measure of taxation, has hitherto enabled us to meet our ever-growing burdens. None of the provincial Governments has incurred any permanent dens cost us net Rx.31,74,000 in the particular year 1888-89 it of the provincial Governments has incurred any permanent obligations for expenditure on the scale of its revenue. Moreover, all the principal ones have balances, and are seeking means for profitably expending them."

More than eight millions sterling will be spent in England and India on railway capital account during 1888-89.

It is announced, with the usual reserve, that the Secretary of State propose to raise 14 millions sterling by Council bills. The Government in India will raise a rupee loan of three crores, of which half a crore is required for the Calcutta and Bombay dock works.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 25.

At the last meeting of the Legislative Council the Bill to amend the law relating to imprisonment for debt was passed. At the conclusion of the sitting the Viceroy, in bidding those present farewell, reviewed the work of the last four seasons. Seventy-three Bills, he said, had been passed, including the Bengal Tenancy, the Punjab Tenancy, the Punjab Land Revenue, the Rent, the Indian Marine, and the Debtors Acts.

venue, the Rent, the Indian Marine, and the Debtors Acts.

Last Friday evening an enthusiastic meeting was held at the Town-hall here, for the purpose of presenting addresses to Lord and Lady Dufferin. The hall was artistically decorated, and the Viceroy and his wife were loudly cheered both on their arrival and on their departure. On the presentation of the addresses by the Lieutenant-Governor, Lord Dufferin made a long speech in reply to it. He highly eulogized the conduct of the feudatory Princes. In explaining his foreign policy, he said that the fixing of the confines of India proper at the Amran range had placed the British in possession of an advanced military position of almost impregnable strength. His interview with the Ameer had not only prevented war—which would otherwise certainly have broken out between England and Russia, in connection with the Penjdeh affair, had England and Russia, in connection with the Penjdeh affair, had not the Ameer been in his camp at the time—but had enabled him, by establishing mutual good-feeling, to secure the Afghan Prince's assent to a Russo-Afghan settlement. The whole Afghan people had assumed a totally different attitude in the last three years.

Turning to Burma he said that he had now a clearer conviction than ever of the necessity for annexation. Burma had been without a Government. There had been no central authority, and even after massacring most of his relatives the King did not dare to leave the precincts of his palace. His territory had been the theatre of anarchy, and one-half of the population had lived by plundering the other half. The local chiefs were cruel and represents the property of the chiefs were cruel and rapacious brigands, exorting money from helpless svillagers by torture and nurder. A Chinese horde shortly before the annexation had taken possession of a most important town, and the King had embarked on a line of diplomacy which would have infallibly brought England into hostile collision with a great European Power. The English merchants had been treated with the greatest injustice, while the temperate remonstrances of the Indian Government had been received with insolence and contempt. Meanwhile the been received with insolence and contempt. Meanwhile the total disintegration of the whole of society in Upper Burma was exercising a most pernicious influence on the peace and prosperity of the Lower Province, and the British proposals had been met with a declaration of war. In consequence had been met with a declaration of war. In consequence Upper Burma had become a province of the British Empire; and the verdict of history would pronounce whether, by establishing order, security, peace, and justice in place of anarchy, rapine, torture, and murder, by replacing the late King's helpless and hopeless administration with the temperate, benignant rule of Queen Victoria, we have not realised a consummation as beneficent as it was unavoidable.

Alluding to the Press, Lord Dufferin urged that it should not seek to excite the hatred of the people against their rulers by attributing to the Government intentions which were the by attributing to the Government intentions which were the fruit merely of vain imagination. By misrepresentations of this character, thirty years ago, India had been deluged in blood. This was an abuse of the protection to freedom of speech extended by the laws of England. In conclusion, the Viceroy spoke as follows:-"The Indian Empire is the marvel of the world. Encouraged by your approbation, I hope to carry home a conviction that, in the opinion of my Anglo-Indian countrymen and Indian fellow-subjects, I have done nothing, during four years of anxious rule, to shake the stability or dim the glory of its majesty, or tarnish that reputation for humanity, justice, and Lady Dufferin, in replying to an address presented by the President of the Memorial Committee, alluding to her great charitable work of supplying female medical aid to the women of India, said that from the first moment at which she had received and ortoken to a greative the Association she had received undertaken to organise the Association she had received valuable and cordial aid from all classes and conditions in valuable and cordial aid from all classes and conditions in every part of India. She had appealed with confidence to the people of India, especially the municipal councils, to take upearnestly, and support liberally, a movement which would bring increased health and happiness to countless Indian households. She would ever return with interest the affection of the people of Calcutta, whose kindness during the past three years had culminated in that demonstration of sympathy and good will and good-will.

The Viceroy will leave Calcutta next Thursday.

The Maharajah of Bettiah has subscribed Rs. 5,000 to the Dufferin Memorial Fund.

In order to commemorate the name of Jamsetjee Nusser-wanjee Petit, the members of his family have subscribed Rs. 700,000 to general charitable purposes, Rs. 36,400 for the foundation of a Parsee orphanage, and Rs. 80,000 for a sanatorium at Bandora.

The memorial portrait of Sir Richard Garth, probably the most popular Chief Justice of Bengal who has ever presided over a Court of Judicature in India, was unveiled by Sir Comer Petheram, the present Chief Justice, on Monday last A large gathering was present, including the Lieutenant Governor, the members of Council, and the Judges. Both the president of the committee and the Chief Justice warmly eulogised the late Chief Justice. The portrait has been hung in the Court of the Chief Justice, in place of that of Sir Elijah Impey, which has been sent to England to be restored. stored.

The recommendations of the Public Service Commissions are under consideration by the local Governments. When their reports have been received the subject will be taken up by the Imperial Government.

At a durbar at Jummoo on Tuesday last the Minister Luch man Dass was dismissed from the presidency of the Cashmere

State Council. The Viceroy and Lady Dufferin were entertained by the Rajah Peary Mohun Mookerjee yesterday at Utterparah, and an address was presented by Native ladies to the Countess, thanking her for her benevolent efforts to ameliorate the condition of Native women.

Enthusiastic telegrams have been received from Mahomedan associations all over India, which are holding meetings to vote valedictory addresses. The Viceroy has thoroughly won the affection of the Mahomedans, in consequence of his sympathetic endeavour to induce them to take a more active part in the public administration. To this cause is to be attributed in large measure the bitterness of the recent personal attacks by a certain portion of the Bengalee Press. Any suggestion to treat other Natives, classes, and sects as enjoying an equal title to a share of official preferments invariably excites the rancorous hostility of the organs in question. The advocacy of equality of this description is interpreted as a declaration of antagonism to the claim of a monopoly of power and patronage put forward on behalf of the Bengalee section of the community. Possibly their late signal defeat may induce these writtens to edent a monopoly of the community. these writers to adopt a more moderate and justifiable tone. This is to be hoped for in their own interest, otherwise they will drive the Government, however unwilling, finally to adopt severe repressive measures, in order to mitigate a great and growing political danger.

SIKKIM.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 25.

At the opening of the sitting of Council on Friday the Vicercy announced the capture of the fort of Lingtu without opposition, and expressed a hope that this facile vindication of opposition, and expressed a hope that this facile vindication of territorial rights would secure free access to the road through Sikkim which had been taken possession of by the enemy, and would close the trifling dispute with Tibet.

According to reports received by telegraph the advance from Mjanah was made through fog and deep snow. The Pioneers moved in advance, and the Derbyshire Regiment brought up the rear. The path was very steep and slippery. The Pioneers, having reached the corner of the final zigzag unobserved, thanks to the dense fog, came suddenly on the fort and rushed it without firing. The Tibetans fled down the hill.

The expedition will rest for a day or two, while the political officers endeavour to open negotiations for a permanent treaty.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MARCH 24.

A second great fire occurred in Rangoon this week. On the evening of the 21st instant, while the embers of the conflagration of the 20th were still smoking, a yet more serious one broke out in the suburb of Kemmendine, to the northward of the town. This fire raged with great fury for some hours, and extended over a space exceeding one mile in length and a quarter of a mile in width. More than 900 native houses were destroyed. The origin of the fire is unknown, but is believed to have been of an accidental nature.

There is no material change this week in the condition of Upper Burma. Toungdwingyee has been fired by a small gang of dacoits, some houses being destroyed. In the Upper Chindwin valley a party of police, commanded by Inspector Bentapole, fell into a dacoit ambuscade. One policeman was killed and two were dangerously wounded, and the police retreated. Inspector Bentapole, who is a Frenchman, was in the employment of M. Haas, in the French Consulate, at Mandalay, prior to Thebaw's fall, and much surprise was felt at his recent appointment as inspector of military police.

Sir George White is to leave Upper Burma on three months' privilege leave, and General Low will assume the command of the troops during his absence.

At a durbar held on the 5th of March at Manigye by Mr. Hildebrand, Superintendent of the Shan States, Konsantonhon was proclaimed Tsawbwa of Northern Theinni, while his rival, Nawmaing, was appointed chief of the southern portion. This arrangement will, it is hoped, prove lasting and satisfactory, and terminate the civil war which has so long disturbed this territory.

The southern Shan column, under Colonel Swettenham, accommenced by relitical effects. There is no material change this week in the condition of

The southern Shan column, under Colonel Swettenham, accompanied by political officers, has proceeded to Tonglon, to receive the submission of the Toungbain Tsawbwa, and will thence return to Mandalay. All the Shans have now submitted, except those of Meanghyen Kyainglon and Kyainglon, to the east of the Salween river.

In the Pyingmana and Tounghoo districts, where the districts of the Salween river.

In the Pyingmana and Tounghoo districts, where the disarmament is being strictly carried out, the dacoits have again become very troublesome. In Pyingmana a loyal Phoongyee has been murdered, and several houses have been burnt by dacoits. In Shwaygyeen the Karens have been rigorously disarmed, although they took an active part in quelling the Burmese revolt in 1886. It is stated by persons resident in those districts, who by their position and experience are specially qualified to judge, that the result of the disarmament, so far as it has been carried out, is simply to leave the loyal and honest villagers at the mercy of marauding gangs. The dacoits continue to receive arms and ammunition through Siam. A large quantity of percussion-caps of French manufacture was recently found in Karennee. The Karens loudly complain that Burman officials are employed to disarm them, and that their request that they might be permitted to give up their arms to English officers has been disregarded. The Karens also complain that they are deprived of their arms without receiving any compensation. Having regard to the long-standing and bitter race hostility between the Burmans and Karens, and to the fact that the Karens have been conand Karens, and to the fact that the Karens have been consistently loyal to the British, their present treatment would appear to be both harsh and injudicious.

MARCH 25. Intelligence has been received that fresh troubles have broken out in the Southern Shan States. Manlind has been ravaged, and the Tsawbwas of Mone and Maing are supposed to have been the aggressors.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS

A TALK WITH SIR RICHARD TEMPLE.

The London correspondent of the Times of India writes: The London correspondent of the Times of India writes:—
I had a long and interesting talk a few evenings ago with Sir Richard Temple on Indian affairs in particular and political questions generally. Your late Governor, who is as energetic a member of Parliament as he was an Indian administrator, told me that he and others were engaged in keeping a House—it was during or shortly after the dinner hour—that is to say, he had promised the Government Whip not to go away unless informed that he might do so. Sir Richard takes kindly to Parliamentary life, though I fancied I detected a touch of sadness in what he said about India, as if he regretted that he was not still in the country for which he did so much and which did so much for him. It used to be thought that at one time he aspired to be Viceroy of India. I believe the one time he aspired to be Viceroy of India. I believe the assumption was justified, but, whatever his thoughts once were, I think he has given up all idea of filling that exalted position. If he were questioned about the matter, he would no doubt reply, that in spite of all we hear about the spread of Democracy this is essentially an aristocratic country, and that that there was no chance of a Commoner being chosen for the Viceroyalty except in times of danger. If you reminded him that Sir John Lawrence was certainly not an aristocrat, Sir Richard would probably answer that his illustrious master owed his appointment solely to the fact than an exceptionally strong man was needed to deal with an exceptional state of strong man was needed to deal with an exceptional state of things. I did venture to ask Sir Richard what he thought of the Marquis of Lansdowne as the successor of Lord Duffering but he avoided committing himself to any decided opinion. If he had thought highly of the selection made by Lord Salisbury, Sir Richard would have said so; if he thought it was a bad one, loyalty to his party—and loyalty to his superiors always was and will be one of his strong points—would induce him to remain quiet. There was another reason, which I need not specify, for his reticence, but I shall perhaps not be doing him an injustice if I say that he, like many other competent persons to whom I have spoken on the subject, thinks that to send out to India at a critical period like the present a man so comparatively little known and untried as the Marquis of Lansdowne is a rather bold experiment. This, so far as I can ascertain it, is the opinion of what may be called experts. Strong party men on the Conservative side, for reasons of can ascertain it, is the opinion of what may be called experts.

Strong party men on the Conservative side, for reasons of another kind, either faintly approve or altogether condemn the appointment. If I might take the liberty of doing so, I should be inclined to include Sir Richard Temple, in the former rather than the latter category.

With reference to Central Asian polities, Sir Richard spoke with considerable freely and as he is a presiderable freely service of the considerable freely service and as he is a presiderable freely ser

With reference to Central Asian polities, Sir Richard spoke with considerable frankness, and as he is a recognised authority on this subject, your readers may be interested in learning what he had to say. I took no notes of our conversation, but my recollection is pretty clear. In the first place, he shares the opinion that the present situation of Continental affairs is full of danger to India. He holds that the outbreak of war in Europe would be the signal for a forward movement of the Russian forces in Control Asia. I asked Sir Richard what in Europe would be the signal for a forward movement of the Rusian forces in Central Asia. I asked Sir Richard what, in the event of that occurring, he would do if the supreme direction of affairs were in his hands. "Well," he said, "I would not send any of our troops to Herat. I would lend the Ameer as many of our officers as he might require, and supply him with ordnance and other matteriel, but to send our men would produce isology, and be the greatest received missing in the said. as many of our officers as he might require, and supply him with ordnance and other materiel, but to send our men would produce jealousy, and be the greatest possible mistake. I would block the mouth of the Khyber Pass, and if we had our army near enough to Kandahar to prevent the enemy passing that place, it would be impossible, absolutely impossible, for them to invade India. If I were in command of our forces, I would invite the Russians to combat at Kandahar. That is, where I think the battle should take place, and where it probably will take place. Then I would harass the enemy in other directions where their position is not invulnerable—Northern China, for example, and the Coast of Finland. The latter I know very well indeed, and I am persuaded that we could do Russia a great deal of injury there. It would be perfectly easy for us to capture Riga and other ports in the maritime provinces of Russia. But, of course, we ought to be most active in the Black Sea, and take the earliest opportunity of seizing Batoum. If we did all this, Russia would find that she had a tougher job than she bargained for." Sir Richard spoke with special emphasis as to how he thought the Russian attack, when it comes, should be met in India itself, and several times declared that he would guarantee to prevent the enemy penetrating through the passes if the entrance to the Khyber were blocked as he suggested, and he had his army near Kandahar to stop a hostile force from proceeding beyond that place. Sir Richard's information about the extension of the railway in the direction of Kandahar was, I thought, a little hazy, but he told me that he had heard nothing about it very lately, and that Parliamentary and the extension of the railway in the direction of Kandahar was, I thought, a little hazy, but he told me that he had heard nothing about it very lately, and that Parliamentary and School Board Work prevented his following Indian affairs so closely as he could wish. He thought the route suggested by himself had been somewhat departed from, but he was going to the India Office next day to get up the facts about the new taxation and should then find out all about it.

CALCUTTA. (Statesman.)

If ever a city was under demented government it is this city of Calcutta. At this moment, the municipality of Paris is raising by octroi £2,000,000 a year, for making that city more beautiful and attractive than it already is, and although it is already the Paradise of urban life, drawing to it by an irresisti-ble fascination the wealthiest people of every country in the world, it slackens its expenditure in no way, and laughs at the idea of its octroi duties impeding trade. And it has been raising this immense revenue for the last thirty years. Grave and sober London has been levying coal and wine dues in the same way from time immemorial for city improvments, the annual revenue from which for the last thirty years has been 40 to 50 lakhs a year.

The American people in spite of their surplus revenue of 20 or 25 millions sterling a year that the administration does not know what to do with, have permitted their municipalities to borrow £220,000.000 sterling for urban improvements, in addition to the enormous expenditure annually made from their

In India meanwhile, and with absolutely nothing yet attempted in the way of municipal improvements, we lay a ban upon local taxation, declaring it to be contrary to political eco-nomy, and forbid the municipalities borrowing money in the only quarters that are willing to lend it. Cities that have only quarters that are willing to lend it. Cities that have neither water, nor drainage, nor conservancy, nor, worst of all, an income to provide them, we declare shall neither tax nor borrow, except under conditions that are impossible. What requires to be done in Calcutta at this moment is as clear as the noonday-sun. The city has no revenue to begin with: for the noonday-sun. The city has no revenue to begin with: for to talk of £100,000 a year, as a revenue for what requires to be done, is childishness. In the next place, the city has no revenue, because no one is willing to contribute thereto in the very least. Water rates, lighting rates, conservancy rates, and police rates—are not taxes at all. They are simply payment for services that cannot be so effectively performed by us individually, and that we therefore club together to get discharged

But services of another order altogether require to be provided for. The bureaucracy—in its absurd jealousy of every suggestion that the people should administer their own affairs, has centralized every semblance of power in its own hands until quite lately. Now the necessary result of this attempt to do everything for the people, and nothing by them, is what we see to-day in Calcutta and its suburbs. The Central government has undertaken to do what no government could do, and when has undertaken to do what no government could do, and when the effort at last breaks down under general indignation at the condition of things thus brought about, the bureaucratic governor, like Pilate, calls for water, and washes his hands be-fore the multitude, saying, "I am innocent of the blood of these persons who have perished and are perishing of cholera and fever. See ye to it." What we see all round us is the result of fever. See ye to it." What we see all round us is the result of a century's neglect, arising from the jealous determination of the Government to concentrate all authority and power in its own hands. In doing so, and in repudiating, at this late hour, all responsibility for the existing condition of things, the State throws upon the local community burdens that it can never discharge without State help. It is not the people of Calcutta or of its suburbs who have brought themselves into this condition. As every one knows, they have been denied all power to prevent this state of things arising, while now that it has arisen, and an urgent public opinion insists upon adequate and complete reform, the Government still bars the way by denying the people power to raise the revenue by which alone can ing the people power to raise the revenue by which alone can the past neglect of the State be redeemed. The municipality is deprived by law of the power to tax the community in such ways as are most eligible, and at the same time are forbidden ways as are most eligible, and at the same time are forbidden all resort to the European capitalist. The Government will neither empower the municipality to levy taxes upon the community, nor to borrow money, and now demands that its own arrear obligations thereto—the accumulations of a century of neglect—shall be discharge by its successors. "See ye to it"—is the uniform tenor of all communications which the Government has to make to the men upon whose shoulders it conveniently lays its own obligations, as the price they are to pay for a mere semblance of self-government.

THE PETROLEUM TAX. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

It is surprising to see how little protest has yet been raised by the adherents of Free Trade in this country against the petroleum tax proposed by Mr. Westland; for the Bill—apart, of course, from the urgent necessity for money which now besets the Indian Government—is of the very essence of Protection. We have in India, in Burma, and the Punjab, a nascent petroleum industry. If Mr. Charles Marvin is to be believed for once in a way, India has it in her power to take a front rank among "Petroleum Powers," by careful utilisation of her opportunities; and to be a first-class "Petroleum Power," according to Mr. Marvin's prophetic vision, is to dominate the world in the future. Among his proposals for encou-It is surprising to see how little protest has yet been raised nate the world in the future. Among his proposals for encouraging the petroleum industry of India, Mr. Marvin recommended, if we recollect his pamphlet aright, a tax on foreign petroleum: and we shall not be surprised to hear it now said petroleum: and we shall not be surprised to hear it now said that Mr. Westland owes his inspiration to the enterprising man who has added the verb "to Marvinise" to the English language. Wherever Mr. Westland got his inspiration, the petroleum tax would gladden the hearts of Protectionists and Fair Traders at home. Petroleum is a commodity very largely used by the masses in this country; and is imported mainly from America and Russia. By taxing this at the ports, direct protection is given to the Indian petroleum industry, at the cost of raising the price of a commodity in universal use. The fact that a measure of Protective tendencies has been introduced without a howl from our political economists is what we duced without a howl from our political economists is what we consider remarkable.

MISSIONARIES AND NATIVE COSTUME.
(Bombay Guardian.)
We hardly think Missionaries should wear Native costume. Of course, there can be no question as to the importance of putting away whatever tends to make a gulf between them and the people they seek to win; and it may be taken for granted that there are some things in the mode of life of many missionaries that might be advantageously renounced. But we do not regard it so all-important as some seem to regard it, we do not regard it so all-important as some seem to regard it, that a foreign missionary should painfully endeavour to make himself "one with the people," or try to persuade them that he is one with them, in costume, manners, and language. He should be approachable, and as fully identified as possible with them in all lawful, open-hearted efforts to do them good. But is not a man's—a missionary's—racial and national individuality a divine endowment; and in sending him forth into the foreign department of the harvest-field, did not his Lord know that he was and would be a foreigner? Should he therefore be desirous of concealing or obliterating this fact? Lord know that he was and would be a foreigner? Should he therefore be desirous of concealing or obliterating this fact? We do not find Paul anxious to conciliate by concealing his Jewish nationality. He did not trust to costume or particular social adaptations, but "by manifestation of the truth commending himself to every man's conscience in the sight of God." For our own part, we are inclined to regard the adoption by foreign missionaries of the Native costume' and autocompany are always to the condensation and the condensation are always to the condensation of the condensation and the condensation are always to the condensation of the condensation of the condensation are always to the condensation of the co customs as a very questionable condescension, not altogether in harmony with that simplicity which is in Christ, entirely lacking Scriptural endorsement, and calculated to divert the Natives from the main thing, however, for the time, it may promote a certain sort of sociability.

BENGAL.

THE Committee of the Bengal Council on the Calcutta THE Committee of the Bengal Council on the Calcutta Municipal Bill has made great progress, or short work of the remaining sections of the measure. The next stage will be that of the Committee's report. On this there may be amendments moved in the full Council. But it is not likely that much will be effected in that way, though the bill is admittedly an ill-drawn and badly-worded one. In the meantime, it is rumoured that a requisition to the Sheriff to call a public meeting to protest against the Bill is in course of signature. This should have been done long ago to have any effect, and all sections of the community might have joined in it.

IMPORTANT changes are about to take place in the medical staffs of the Calcutta hospitals. No less than three officers are about to proceed on furlough. Dr. Birch, Surgeon Superintendent of the General Hospital, will be succeeded by Dr. Crombie, from Dakka; Dr. R. C. Sanders, of the Mayo Hospital, by Dr. Perry, Professor of Anatomy at Lahore; and Dr. Harvey, of the Eden Hospital, by Dr. Joubert.

THE Natives of Benares are protesting against the oppressive octroi duty on cloth, and the feeling prevails to such an extent that not a yard of cloth has been imported into that station for some days. Another source of dissatisfaction prevailing among octroi taxpayers is said to owe its origin to a newly-made rule, which insists on the production of the bills of lading (Bejucks) in their original covers, unopened. In other words, consignees receiving envelopes addressed to them containing bills of lading must not open the covers, but take them to the Octroi Office to be opened there, in order, it is believed, to prevent the possibility of the contents of the bills of lading peing tampered with.

EDUCATION does not readily strike one as an effectual remedy for dacoity. Yet ignorance is assigned as the cause of dacoity, in Hazaribagh, which has the unenviable notoriety of dacoity, in Hazaribagh, which has the unenviable notoriety of standing first for that species of crime among all the districts of Bengal. Mr. Giles, late officiating Deputy Inspector-General of Police, writing of the Hazaribagh dacoities, says:—"They belong to a class with which I am very familiar, and which is peculiarly difficult of detection. The dacoits are usually Bhunnyas, Rajwars, or similar tribes occupying quite the lowest position in the social scale both in point of ignorance and poverty. It would be difficult to find among 100,000 of them a single individual who can read and write, and only a very small minority own any rights in land. Until this state of things is altered, they will continue to prey upon their betters. They form themselves into gangs whenever hunger pinches, and attack and rob wayfarers for the sake of food or any property, however trifling, they may have about food or any property, however trifling, they may have about them. The plunder is then and there divided, and after a series of such robberies the gang disperses for a time."

MADRAS.

CAPTAIN H. A. STREET, Port Officer, Madras, has informed the Madras Government, that as no action appeared to have the Madras Government, that as no action appeared to have been taken by his office in respect to the instructions of 5th August, 1884, and 11th November, 1884, relative to the orders of the Government of India on the subject of "flags and pendants to be used by the different Local Governments and departments subordinate to them," he has issued the necessary orders to have the same immediately attended to so far as the Marine Department is concerned, but as the instructions in question do not seem to have been communicated by the Government to the "Customs," "Port Trust," and "Water Police" departments he submitted that these Departments may be supplied with a copy of the orders specified above, and informed that the necessary flags can be supplied, on indent, from the Marine Department. He also has begged that Government notify that the Local Government ensign is to be flown in future at the flag-staff of the different Port Officers instead of the Union Jack as hitherto.—Mail.

THE SIKKIM EXPEDITIONARY FORCE.

(Pioneer Correspondent.)

CAMP, KALINPONG, FEBRUARY.

We have been waiting in view of our frontier for several days. It was considered prudent not to cross in a hurry or all together; and so our small force has slowly but steadily been worked up to within a few miles of our frontier, the Rishi worked up to within a few miles of our frontier, the Rishi river. We were detrained at Siligori which, for the information of our Punjab friends, is the railway terminus of the Eastern Bengal State Railway, and is a small hamlet below the Darjeeling hills. From this we marched by companies every other day, as transport would permit, through the Terai and followed up the Teesta river for about twenty-five miles, eventually crossing it by what is known as the Teesta suspension bridge sion bridge.

Sibhook, the first march from Siligori, is in the middle of the Terai, and consists of only a few shattered bamboo huts, with no supplies of any sort. Here we had to make an encamping ground and clear the jungle, which in this part is very dense. This was done by each of our companies in succession, and for the first company must have looked a heavy task. We were recommended to keep camp fires buring at night, as the place was feverish, and as tigers occasionally frequented the spect. A few of us were anxious to see these denizons of the spot. A few of us were anxious to see these denizens of the jungle, and though a couple of excursions were arranged trying to come up with them, unfortunately only their tracks were visible, and we could not spare time to beat for them in business-like style. We did, however, bag-bagged a bison. Our party then had to move on to Reang which is the second march from Siligori, and about 13 miles from Sibhook. On the road to Reang, the Kalijora is passed, which at this season is the dry bed of a mountain torrent. It is several yards wide, and evidently a dangerous place in the rainy season. The bridge here has been carried away by the torrent; but the Public Works Department are erecting another, which should have device a fortnight as all the appliances are at hand. The Public Works Department are erecting another, which should be ready in a fortnight, as all the appliances are at hand. The bed is sandy and rather heavy for the Commissariat hired carts, which are miserable specimens, and drawn by very inferior stock. Reang is another small clearing in the Terai with a good wooden suspension bridge over the Reang river, which falls into the Teesta a few yards below. A camping ground had to be made here, and ramps cut to the river bed in several places. Ramboos were growing luxuriantly all around us and places. Bamboos were growing luxuriantly all around us, and their leaves were the only fodder our ponies and the transport mules had to exist on. The next march to the Teesta suspension bridge is about eight miles. A bungalow and guardhouse are here. Our artisans had a lot of work mending the small bridges along this march; also blasting the rocks of several corners which were very narrow and sharp. There is no room for a camping ground here, and the men's tents had to be pitched here and there in places dug out on the hillside. The whole of the route from Siligori to the Teesta may be called a first-rate hill road, is shady throughout, and bridged, with the exception of the Kalijora. It is, however, feverish and confined, and undoubtedly very unhealthy in the rains. At the Teesta bridge a road comes in from Darjeeling, which is about eighteen miles off, and our Commissariat Officer has had thoughts of conveying supplies to Goom railway station, on the Darjeeling hill rail-The next march to the Teesta suspension bridge is about supplies to Goom railway station, on the Darjeeling hill railway, thence to Pashok and the Teesta on army transport mules. I do not think, however, this would be a saving to Government. From the Teesta suspension bridge the next stage is to Kalinpong, distance about four and a-half miles. The road winds up a very stage agreent pagety the whole way. winds up a very steep ascent nearly the whole way. About the second mile up the hill a clearing has been made for troops to camp, and there is a stream of good water close at hand. A to camp, and there is a stream of good water close at hand. A new road with an easier gradient is in course of preparation by the Public Works Department, and one meets it here and there going up the old road. This, when finished, will be a decided improvement for transport purposes. Kalinpong is about 4,000 feet, and from it a fine view is obtained of the snows and Kinchinjunga and surrounding peaks across the Sikkim territory and bordering Tibet. Mr. Paul, the Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling, had gone ahead of us to have an interview with the Raja of Sikkim at Guntuk, which is about forty miles from Kalinpong. He had a party of our signallers with him, and another party had gone on fourteen miles to a hill 6,400 feet, known as Rissum Hill. of our signallers with him, and another party had gone on fourteen miles to a hill 6,400 feet, known as Rissum Hill. This party formed the connecting link between him and us, and so we knew fairly well how things were getting on. At Kalinpong are several well-built buildings, a comfortable bungalow belonging to the Deputy Commissioner of Darjeeling, a Forest Officer's house, a Government dispensary, and many well-built mission buildings, with a cemetery attached. We felt the cold here for the first time after leaving the Funjab, and our men were glad of the Government grant of warm clothing. At about 4 P.M. a chilly breeze was generally felt blowing down the valley from the snows, and we were glad of blowing down the valley from the snows, and we were glad of our greatcoats. It is a pity Government does not supply the men with woollen comforters instead of the Balaclava caps.

ments would not wear it.

It seems to be the custom of these hill people to hold weekly fairs on different days at different places. Kalinpong has its fair on Sundays; and the surrounding country people collect in numbers, from one to two hundred, to sell their simple hill produce. Farm-produce, grain and pulse of different sorts were the main things exhibited for sale, and also a few kookris, beads, necklaces, iron, hill shoes, cloth, kerosine oil in small quantities a goet and hig or two and lest but not least. small quantities, a goat and pig or two, and last but not least, a hill liquor in the shape of intoxicating spirit. The men and women all seem to like this concoction and get apparently inebriated on it. They dance and sing as is customary in more civilised countries when the bowl is passed round. The Tibetans generally wear a small felt hat, something like a wideawake, which they doff as a sign of respect. It seems most peculiar to meet these people and not receive the usual most peculiar to meet these people and not receive the usual salaam but a rustic bow and take-off of the hat. All the hill people wear most murderous-looking long knives and a few wear kookris, but so far we have met with the greatest respect from the people. We are told that their manner will change as we get to the Rangli river, but I see no reason why it should, as the Sikkimites are our friends and we pay hand-comply for everything we get somely for everything we get.

We have been straining our eyesight trying to get a glimpse of the Lingtu mountain which lies straight in front of our camp; but the high hills in this direction seem to be daily camp; but the figh first in this direction seem to be daily covered in cloud or haze, and our efforts up to the present have been fruitless. I hear that at Pedong, which is our next march, we will get a much better view of Lingtu, and am in hopes of being able to distinguish the Tibetan fort or stronghold which these foolish people have erected right across our trade route. The fort is said to consist of only one stone wall 12 feet high and 4 feet thick, which runs across the top of the 12 feet high and 4 feet thick, which runs across the top of the hill from khud to khud. The road runs through the gateway in the fort wall. At either end of the wall are said to be bastions. In front of this, and I believe hidden from view, some hundreds of yards down the hill are "sungars," which many who served in Afghanistan will recognise.

THE NATIVE MADRAS ARMY.

On Wednesday week Major-General J. Michael, C.S.I., Madras Staff Corps, read a paper on the constitution, organisation, and interior economy of the Native Madras Army, at the Royal United Service Institution. The Duke of Buckingthe Royal United Service Institution. The Duke of Bucking-ham (late Governor of Madras) presided. General Michael reminded his audience that the town of Madras was founded by the servants of the East India Company in 1639, but although the merchants employed armed retainers, it was not until 1786 that any attempt was made to raise and organise troops. It was not, however, until 1758 that the Madras Government began to raise regiments composed of inhabitants of the Carnatic and it was thus that the present Medras Sapray of the Carnatic, and it was thus that the present Madras Sepoy force came into existence. The lecturer passed in review the services rendered by the force when it was first instituted a censervices rendered by the force when it was first instituted a century and a quarter since, under Laurence Clive and Eyre Coote, and after describing the changes which had since occurred in the establishment, he stated that the Queen's Jubilee year found this Presidency army composed of four regiments of light cavalry (two being lancers), the sappers and miners, thirty-two regiments of infantry (two designated pioneers), and three of light infantry. The details of each regimental establishment were given, and it was shown that each cavalry regiment had its officers in the proportion of 12 Native to 9 European, while in the sappers and miners there were 22 European officers to 24 Native; the European non-commissioned officers were 67, while the Native force of non-commissioned officers and rank-and-file numbered 1,384. Each commissioned officers and rank-and-file numbered 1,384. Each of the infantry regiments consisted of 9 European officers, 16 Native officers, and 873 non-commissioned officers and rankand-file. There was a general mixture of creeds and castes in this army, but the cavalry was mainly composed of Mahomedans, and the languages were many, most of the men being able to speak three or four languages.
The Madras Sepoys could not compare, he acknowledged, in physique with the men from Northern India, but they possessed valuable qualities of general healthness, sobriety and power of endurance, both of fatigue and fasting. In conclusion, the lecturer gave a list of the services performed by the Army of Madras in different parts of the East, and included battles fought against the French, Hyder Ali, Tippoo, the Mahrattas, the Poligars, the Chinese, the Abyssinians, the Persians, the Afghans, and the Egyptians in former times, and at Tel-el-Kebir and Suakim. Loid Chelmsford was among those who bore testimony to the good qualities of the Madras soldier in the field, and the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, speaking from his experience when Governor of Madras, con-Native officers, and 873 non-commissioned officers and rankspeaking from his experience when Governor of Madras, considered that the authorities would do the Madras Sepoys a service if the followers within the lines were limited, and he thought that while there should be more continuous service of European officers with a Sepoy regiment, a judicious limitation of age in regard to Native officers would be advantageous.

THE NATIVE BOMBAY ARMY.

Major-General W. E. Macleod, Bombay Army, Retired, delivered a lecture on Friday week at the Royal United Service Institution, on "The History of the Native Army of Bombay from 1837 to 1887: Its constitution, organisation, equipment, and interior economy." Major-General Sir Frederick J. Goldsmid, K.C.S.I., C.B., presided. The following is General Macleod's résumé of his paper. 1st. When noting the chief deficiencies in the system of the Indian Native Army as affecting that of Rombard my property must not be supposed to bear on that of Bombay, my remarks must not be supposed to bear on present or future affairs on the Afghan frontier, as to the remote probability of employing there, outside the walls of our Empire, Native troops held to be of inferior physique and prestige. I leave that to the writers on that topic—some of them with much practical and personal experience to back them, and some with no such experience whatever. I look merely to the remedy of defects in the system for the benefit of an army which may again, as in days not long gone by, be called on to protect Her Majesty's dominions in the equally valuable southern rarts of India—to wit, within the walls of her Empire, in the Bombay Presidency; for (though I have not dwelt much on the good service rendered in days gone by in dwelt much on the good service rendered in days gone by in our Presidency interior) the present quiet in Upper and Lower Scinde, in the Southern Mahratta country, the lawless (Wagheer) tribes surrounding "Kattiawar," and the still often dangerous trespass of the Bheels from the difficult jungles of Khandeish and Guzerat—all these I say may any day call forth again the services of the Bombay Native Army, which in 1838 numbered twenty-six regiments for service within the strictly speaking Bombay limits, against, now in 1888, twenty-two regiments only, with their service extended to Scinde, Quetta, Southern Mahratta country, and Rainootana; for, of the present Southern Mahratta country, and Rajpootana; for, of the present thirty regiments, three Belocch and one Marinel attalion are so to say, local, and four good old faithful regiments have for financial reasons been recently swept away from the Bombay Native Infantry. They may have been temporarily deficient Native Infantry. They may have been temporarily deficient in physique and smartness, and their useful services may not have been all recorded on their colours; but I know them (personally and all through my service) to be four as firm, loyal, and trustworthy Native regiments as ever took the Bombay Native recruit's oath of fidelity to the State! 2nd. The reason I presume to make my "personal experience of thirty-seven years" the authority for all I say in this essay, springs from my objection to receive as bond fide military history, the pamphlets and books written on the military operations in India for that and preceding periods, by writers who, clever and intelligent though they be, appear to me to put forth their opinions with the eye and mind of partisans, and thus (unsupported by personal knowledge of, or authority for, their opinions) they bring to bear on their record of events, and individuals connected therewith, a political and "party-wisit" bies and an amount of here worship (to the events). and individuals connected therewith, a political and "party-spirit" bias, and an amount of hero worship (to the exclusion of other equally distinguished men), all foreign to the real history, thus losing sight of the impartiality and justice which should be the infallible guide of an historian. I claim for my paper that it is supported by long represent according with should be the infamible guide of an instorian. I claim for my paper that it is supported by long personal association with Sepoys of every caste and country—in every position of service, in quarters, camp, field, action, board ship—long and trying marches in foreign lands, amid privations of climate and food, &c. I never regret having joined the Bombay Native Army, within the training of which I learnt, from ensign to colonel, my duty as a soldier.

NOTICES BOOKS. OF

NAPOLEON AND HIS DETRACTORS.*

"I am doomed to become the prey of libel-writers, but I have little fear of becoming their victim; they will gnaw at granite." Such was the great Napoleon's forecast of the future when, despondent and, perchance, in despair, his proud spirit fretted in confinement in the island of St. Helena. And assuredly his prediction was doomed to be fulfilled to the very letter. Napoleon triumphant was followed by a train of fulsome and insincere flatterers, Napoleon in adversity was pursued by a pack of loud-speaking, unprincipled, and meanminded traducers.

In these circumstances it is no more than natural that his nephew, Prince Napoleon, should step into the breach, and, in turn, make an onslaught upon those who have attacked the fair name and fame of his illustrious uncle. Nor can it occasion much wonder if the advocate in this case is unable to see the faults of his clients, or perhaps rather, it should be said, if, seeing them, he carefully conceals his knowledge from the public. But accepting, as we do, that Napoleon the First was incomparably one of the greatest men of his day, admitting incomparably one of the greatest men of his day, admitting also, as is unquestionable, that he had faults, neither few nor far between, it is refreshing to witness a combat wherein the fiery Frenchman lays on with sword drawn upon the detractors who dared to assail, and the libellers who presumed to disparage. M. Tainc is painted as a man "who drew so largely from impure sources, and is a worthy disciple of the writers who inspired him"; Prince Metternich is gibbeted as having displayed "brilliant duplicity towards the great man of whom he affected to be the courtier and almost the friend"; Bourrienne, the schoolfellow, companion, and eventually secretary of he affected to be the courtier and almost the friend"; Bourrienne, the schoolfellow, companion, and eventually secretary of the Great Emperor, is accused of having distorted and shamefully falsified history; Mme. de Remusat is charged with giving way to "wounded self-love, mistaken calculations, unsatisfied ambitions—the anger of the woman who has been jilted and deceived in her hopes"; the Abbé de Pradt is let off with two words of condemnation, but they are severe—"miserable scoundrel!" and, lastly, Comte Miot de Melito stands condemned as "a real type of an official of an inferior mind, and always the prey of his private interests." This may all be the outcome of biassed dislike, but there is a good ring of enthusiasm about it, and the volume is welcome and interesting. The final chapter, entitled "The Man and his Work," is particularly worthy of perusal, and enhances the value of a very valuable contribution to the discussion as to the character of the most illustrious son of which our neighbours across the Channel can boast—a man who sacrificed an bours across the Channel can boast—a man who sacrificed an unbounded reputation upon the altar of inordinate ambition, but a man who, it must never be forgotten, did and dared for his country to an extent that, in his time, France was for a while the arbiter of the destinies of Europe.

EVERY INCH A SOLDIER.*

The scene of "Every Inch a Soldier" is laid in India about the time of the Mutiny—a country of adventures and a period of stirring events. Of course, as the tale advances, the reader is carried back in imagination to the most glorious achievements of '57. Then England's fate tottered in the balance, then included a fate of importality than ments of '57. Then England's fate tottered in the balance, then mighty deeds of heroism shed a halo of immortality round scarcely imaginable feats of prowess and courage; then Albion's sons—aye, and Albion's daughters—defended the honour of their Queen and country; then the tide of rebellion was stemmed and turned. The events of those momentous months have left imperishable traces on the sands of time, and no novelist need fear recalling public attention to the scenes of that anxious and glorious period. "Delhi" is a name which even now after the lapse of more than a quarter of a century quickens the pulse and makes the blood course more rapidly in the veins. Mr. Colquhoun's readers will therefore dwell with pleasure upon that portion of his tale which proclaims anew the heroisms of heroes and the timidities of their timorous foes.

Nor are the allusions to the secret fraternity in India known as "Thugs" without interest. This well-nigh extinct race was once the scourge and blight of the land of the sunny East. Strangling their victims as the latter sat by the wayside to rest their weary limbs, these fiends in human shape soothed their consciences by the self-satisfying sophistry that they did not shed blood. All honour, then, to the great and revered memory of Colonel Sleeman, who waged the war of extinction against these enemies of society, these diabolical pests and curses of God's creation.

Lastly, there is a habit in the East of amassing and burying treasure, the outcome of centuries of war, persecution and outrage. So that even in this the nineteenth century of grace at times valuable hoards are found in out-of-the-way nooks and crannies.

All the above afford ample scope for "fancy free," and Mr. All the above afford ample scope for "fancy free," and Mr. Colquhoun has turned them to excellent account in his extremely fascinating tale, which is replete with vivid scenes and striking incidents. Interest never flags, there is no nodding of the head or sighing of the heart, no "skipping" is likely to occur, and as page after page passes in review the characters grow upon the reader, who will part with regret with one of the most enjoyable novels of the day. We beg most warmly to thank Mr. Colquhoun for pleasant half-hours in the society of "Every Inch a Soldier."

CIVIL SERVICE CALENDAR, WITH OFFICIAL REGULATIONS.+

This little volume is, beyond compare, the best guide to the Civil Service which, so far as we know, has ever appeared, for the reason that it not only contains the formal regulations—in this respect it is no better than scores of rivalsreplete with hints pregnant with importance to youths who possess knowledge, but lack experience. Added to this, there are specimen sheets of questions tending to show the nature and style of papers which are usually set; and to complete the advantages which raises this guide above its fellows, samples of writing and consecutions. ples of writing and composition are included; these have not been prepared as, theoretically, likely to obtain full marks, but have been selected from amongst the papers actually handed into the examiners, whose approbation thereof is a test that others who do likewise may expect to obtain a like satisfactory result.

THE INDIAN MAGAZINE.*

The greatly-to-be-deplored retirement of Lord Dufferin from the exalted post in which he has rendered such admirable service receives a scarcely adequate notice in the first paper of this issue. It is scarcely too much to say that, had so mischief-making an idéologue—to use Napoleon's phrase—as Lord Ripon been succeeded by a less discrect Statesman than the present Viceroy, the race animosities between Europeans and Natives, which the former seemed to make it his especial business to brindle and to feeter would have reached a very depression kindle and to foster, would have reached a very dangerous kindle and to toster, would have reached a very damper-height.

We are glad to see, from the pen of a distinguished Native gentleman, so thoroughly well-reasoned an Essay on the social effects of the Hindu institution of caste as that contributed by Mr. Seva Ram to the present number under the title "The whole disease in a single view." We have rarely met with so clear an exposition, in so small a compass, of the disastrous effect of caste, as now interpreted, on the larger and weaker, but assuredly not the less important, of the two sexes.

Mr. A. K. Dutt supplies an interesting account of his "Winter Trip in Sweden." With both country and people he was much pleased; and he points out, with no little accument.

"Winter Trip in Sweden." With both country and people he was much pleased; and he points out, with no little acumen, the differences between England and Sweden which most strike a writer who is a native of neither.

In supporting, against "Punjabee," the conclusions at which he has arrived regarding "the real vernacular of Northern India," Mr. Pincott points out the practical identity, for all purposes, of "Hindi and Hindustani" in their simple forms, and urges that the Hindus, who form five-sixths of the Native community, should be allowed to write official documents in Nagari characters. He justly remarks that "even Indian village postmen have to read the Roman, the Arabic, and the Nagari characters in order to deliver letters; and," he adds, "we may fairly credit officials with more intelligence than that of a postman." We think his claim, urged on behalf of five-sixths of the population, one in itself reasonable, and well sixths of the population, one in itself reasonable, and well worthy of consideration by the powers that be.

THE MISS CRUSOES.†

There is something wonderfully grotesque in Colonel Colomb's quaint volume, "The Miss Crusoes." Taking his cue from the immortal Defoe, the son of Mars contrives to get two little wee brats habited upon an unknown island—then follow a series of most amusing adventures, or, rather, misadventures. First of all the tiny children planned to escape in a washtub, but "it waggled a good deal," and the effort was abandoned as hopeless. Then came perils of birds, perils of cats, perils of food, perils of everything and anything, for the united ages of the twain would scarcely amount to double figures. But at last a ray of hope broke through the cloud of distress: "they mot a gentlemen of the country"—se they distress; "they met a gentleman of the country"—as they thought—so, bowing and curtseying, they did salaam to the "great unknown" in the person of a monstrous gorilla; but the latter was a stray "gentleman" from amidst many, taking a stroll and "eating the air." When the rest of the troop arrived the children began to take alarm, till at length they arrived the children began to take alarm, till at length they succeeded in frightening away the apes by the aid of a huge umbrella, which came to hand just at the critical moment.

The volume is replete with delicate satire and scarcely-veiled allusions to "he, she and it" in the world around us. It is a pretty conceit prettily executed, and Colonel Colomb is entitled to add to his many triumphs the laughable, quaint, and most amusing fiction of the "Miss Crusoes."

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

THE annual financial statement of the Indian Government for 1888-89, which is summarised in to-day's telegrams from Calcutta, can hardly be said to be a satisfactory one. Nor is much consolation to be derived from Mr. Westland's remark that Indian finance "is a strange blending of elements, which we can regard with a feeling of certainty and confidence, and of large outlying uncertainties over which we have no control." Whatever theory may be accepted, the fact remains that the Government of India is in straitened circumstances so far as its exchequer is concerned. The estimates for 1888-89 show an expected surplus of Rs. 423,000, but against this has to be put the charges for special defences and the proposed railway extension. The money required is to be raised on loan, and no doubt there will be no difficulty in thus getting it, as the credit of the Government of India is good. The Times of this morning points out that that credit is markedly better than that of any European country, and it can therefore be argued that the finances of India are in a sound condition on account of the confidence shown by the capitalists. But in stating that India can borrow money at a slender fraction over what the Home Government can do it points out that this is a dangerous facility, as it tempts borrowing for all purposes, and most of all for so-called reproductive public works, which, however, are not always reproductive. Exception cannot well be taken to the following:-" If an addition to the public debt of a country may be regarded as the hopeful sign which Sir Evelyn Baring's report of Egypt has lately declared it to be, there is reason to look on the finances of India as in an especially flourishing state. But since it is always some time before new railways even begin to pay their way, and since the State railways of India have been exceptionally backward in this respect, there is too much ground for thinking that the Estimates for 1888-89 will follow the recognised course, and that when they come to be revised they may prove even less satisfactory than they appear at first entry." Exactly so. Even those who take the roseate view of Indian finance will scarcely be prepared to contradict this statement, based, as it is, on actual past experience. Mr. Westland shows that the financial results for 1887-88 will probably be worse than the Estimates by Rs. 2,464,000, upon which the Times sensibly remarks: "The financial year is not yet closed, so that there is still some uncertainty as to the figures for the concluding month. But there is no suggestion that the closed accounts will be more favourable than the revised Estimates. We learn only that there is room for considerable variation, and our experience of Indian finance leads us to regard this prospect as alarming rather than encouraging." We should think so, indeed; but how do the optimists propose to solve the difficulty? If expenditure must go on increasing in India, as it has been doing of late, it is a certainty that a limit must some day come to the facility of borrowing money to meet it. If the resources of civilisation have not yet failed to find some new method of taxation, at all events the Finance Minister of India does not dare to suggest any, and beyond the increased salt tax and the impost on petroleum he apparently would not go. The state of things is certainly not bright; but there is balm in Gilead. Cannot some attempt be made to economise? There is ample field for the exercise of that virtue in dealing with Indian finance, both in India and at home. By all means let there be a rigid supervision over all expenditure in India; but again we ask, Why not have a rigid supervision over the Home charges against India also? On thislatter point we may be allowed to quote from an evening contemporary, with whose general politics we do not always agree. But the writer of the following is not very much out as regards truth and common sense:-"The Indian Government is by no means perfect, but, in the matter of economy, it certainly compares favourably not only with our own, but with most of the continental Governments. But how can a Government be effectively economical when one-fourth of its total revenue has to be sent to a foreign country? Every year the Indian Government sends to this country a sum of fourteen millions sterling, more or less. The Anglo-Indian administrators have no choice in the matter! the home Government enacts this sum, and India must pay. About two years ago the Indian Government appointed a Commission to conduct a rigid inquiry into public expenditure, and, from the report of this Commission, many important economies have resulted. But the home charges are beyond the control of the Indian Government, and no one inquires into them. The British public and the British Parliament can talk unctuously about the poverty-stricken Indian peasant and the opium-sodden Chinaman, but all the while we, as a nation, are nocketing the fourteen millions sterling which constitute India's tribate to England." The figures may not be exactly correct, and the facts may be a trifle coloured, but the main point of the argument has yet to be answered.

During the three months ending 31st December last the cattle, &c., destroyed by tigers and cheetahs in the Madras Presidency included 725 bullocks, 868 cows, 221 calves, 241 buffaloes, 188 sheep, 169 goats, 11 horses or ponies, 26 asses, 10 dogs, and 11 pigs. About two-thirds of the "casualties occurred in Malabar and South Canara.

The Civil and Military Gazette wonders that subalterns in the Bombay and Madras armies, who are willing to serve in the Punjab, do not apply for appointments in the Punjab police, in which vacancies will shortly occur. "Twenty-five per cent. of the officers of this Force should be military men; and every third vacancy in the first grade of Assistant District Superintendent (pay Rs. 450) is usually reserved for a military candidate. Of late years, however, military applicants for police appointments have not been numerous, and at present there are scarcely twelve per cent. of military officers in the Force "

SIR F. ROBERTS ON TEMPERANCE.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief made a speech on temperance at a concert and meeting at the Royal Artillery Theatre, Meerut, on March 3rd. Sir Frederick Roberts praised temperance in everything, and pointed out its many advantages, stating the cause had done much good for the army. Crime had decreased, and several were the blessings that had followed in its wake. The good was spreading rapidly and he haved some day good was spreading rapidly, and he hoped some day he would command an army of temperance men. Mr. Gregson had done excellent work, and Mr. Beatty was following well in his footsteps, and was, at this moment, interviewing all temperance societies and regiments in India, and would place before the Government the results of his labours, which would help the Government in its new scheme of doing away with the centeen and replacing it by a scheme of doing away with the canteen, and replacing it by a large room where all the men, abstainers or not, could get mild refreshments, and all could have social intercourse with each other. Our chaplains should help the cause, for an intermixture of religion would give a healthful impetus. Bad language was another great evil that had to be contended with, as it did no good and set a had around to the younger hands. as it did no good and set a bad example to the younger hands. Sir Frederick exhorted all hands to suppress bad language and advance the cause of temperance in every way possible.

Correspondence.

MR. SLAGG, LORD RANDOLPH CHURCHILL, AND THE UNDER-SECRETARY FOR INDIA. TO THE EDITOR.

-I have read with particular interest your remarks on the debate which arose from Mr. Slagg's motion regarding the defence of our North-West Frontier in India; and I would beg leave to offer a few observations on the same subject.

Mr. Slagg's motion was directed chiefly towards eliciting the authority on which the frontier policy, which had continuously been adopted by the Indian Government ever since our dominions became conterminous with Afghanistan, had been reversed of late years. Lord Dalhousie, under whose rule our present North-West Frontier was acquired, recorded that that "frontier was as acquired, recorded that that that "frontier gave us as complete security against Russia as it is possible in the nature of things to compass." When, in later years, irresponsible advisers suggested an advance into Beluchistan and eventually into Afghanistan, the suggestion was condemned in the most emphatic terms by the highest authorities on the subject. The Lieut-Covernor of the Punjab said: "Can we forget our former failure in Afghanistan and its fatal consequences? I cannot regard 1311. H. Rawlinson's proposals otherwise than as an untimely revival of the policy of 1838, which nearly ruined the Empire, and the effects of which we have still to get over." The Commander-in-Chief of H.M.'s Forces in India, after fully exceeded the unsound character of the proposals, added: "A posing the unsound character of the proposals, added: "A great mischief is done by those who, from whatever cause, occupy themselves in preaching the falsehood of our weakness in India. We are simply invincible in that country against all the powers in the world, provided we are true to ourselves." The Viceroy in Council wrote to the Secretary of State in January, 1869: "We think it impolitic to decrease any of the difficulties which would be entailed on Russia if that country seriously thought of invading India, as we should certainly decrease them if we left our frontier and met her half way, in a difficult country, and possibly in the midst of a hostile and exasperated population. We foresee no limit to the expendiexasperated population. We foresee no limit to the expenditure which such a move might require. Should Russia ever think of invading India, our true policy, our strongest security, would be found in previous abstinence from entanglements at Cabul, Candahar, or any similar outpost, and in full reliance on a compact army within our own territories or on our borders." The soundness of the policy embodied in the documents referred to has never been controverted; and Lord Responsibled even after he had decided on the investion. Lord Beaconsfield, even after he had decided on the invasion of Afghanistan for the furtherance of his policy towards. Russia, made the following significant declaration in 1878, regarding the North-West Frontier of India: "So far as the invasion of India in that quarter is concerned, it is the opinion of Her Majesty's Government that it is hardly practicable. The base of operations of any possible foe is so remote, the communications are so difficult, the aspect of the country so forbidding, that we have long arrived at an opinion that an invasion of our Empire by passing the mountains which form the North-West Frontier is one which we need not dread."

The disasters and humiliations, the loss of life and treasure, which resulted from our attempts in 1878-80 to establish British garrisons in Afghanistan confirmed with appalling accuracy the soundness of the views just mentioned; and we have certainly a right to know by whose advice and on what ground those views are now set at naught, and a course is pursued which threatens not only to weaken our power of defence, but to involve the Indian exchequer in insolvency, by the immeasurable expenditure on which the Government have embarked for the construction of railways leading into Afghanistan. In vain do we look for a reply to this all-important question either in the speech of Lord R. Churchill, who was instrumental in giving a great impetus to the fatal course now pursued, or in that of the Under-Secretary for India, who endeavoured to impress his hearers with the fact that they were ignorant of the actual frontiers of British India.

Whatever be the change recently made in the line of our Indian frontier, unknown to Parliament, it was with reference to the boundaries which previously existed that Sir Frederick. Roberts, whose name is connected with the most glorious. episodes of the late unfortunate war, wrote from Cabul on May 29, 1880, after the conclusion of peace:—"We have nothing to fear from Afghanistan, and the best thing to do is to leave it as much as possible to itself. Should Russia in future years attempt to conquer Afghanistan or invade India through it we should have a better chance of attaching the Afghans to our interests if we avoid all interference with them in the meantime.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

India in Parliament.

THE INDIAN FRONTIER.

Sir J. Goldsmid asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether the Indian Government had decided upon the reply they would give to the Nizam and other great Indian Princes who had offered to contribute men and money towards the defence of the frontier, and whether they had adopted a plan which would utilise these liberal offers.

Sir J. Gorst: These matters are still under the consideration of the Government of India, and the Secretary of State is not yet in a position to make any communication to Parliament on the subject.

THE INNER HARBOUR OF ADEN.

Mr. T. SUTHERLAND asked the Under-Secretary for India, with reference to the memorial addressed to the Secretary of State for India by the owners of steamships which use the port of Aden, dated April 16, 1885, advocating the deepening of the inner harbour of Aden, and also to the reply of Mr. J. K. Cross, dated May 20, 1885, stating that he had recently requested the Government of India to consider the steps. requested the Government of India to consider the steps necessary for establishing a harbour trust for the port, on which the commercial community should be suitably represented, and to which should be intrusted the duties of administering the port funds and carrying out needful improvements, inasmuch as a Bill was passed by the Bombay Legislative Council in July, 1887, constituting a port trust for Aden for the above purposes, whether he could state when the Viceroy's assent to the Bill might be expected and the trust formed, so that the work of deepening the inner harbour might be proceeded with.

Sir J. Gorst: A telegram was sent to India on Saturday in reference to the question of the Aden Port Trust Bill, but an answer has not yet been received--(hear, hear).

an answer has not yet been received—(hear, hear).

NEW DOCK AT BOMBAY.

Admiral FIELD asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether he could state what progress had been made and what expenditure incurred in the construction of the new dock at Bombay promised last Session for Her Majesty's ships of war; also what time would be required to complete the same, and at what estimated cost.

Sir J. Gorst: The proposals of the Government of India are now under the consideration of the Lords of the Admiralty, and until a decision has been come to by them it is impossible to state either the time or the money required for the work.

to state either the time or the money required for the work. No expenditure of any importance has yet been incurred. The Secretary of State is most anxious to see this work carried through, and no time shall be lost on his part.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of now Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offiesed by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette "circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies, It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the Frensh, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the Germen, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng'and regarding Military affairs.

Why pay £5 or give high prices to shopkeepers, when you can get J. B. DENT & SONS' RELIANCE IMPERIAL LEVER WATCH in strong Sterling Silver Cases, Jowelled in 8 holes, Compensation Balance, lasts a lifetime, for £2 2s. Warranted for Five Years, and, in keyless movement, 20s. extra.

The RELIANCE KEYLESS LEVER in strong Sterling Silver Cases, Compensation Balance, dust and damp proof, Five Years' Warranty, £3. J. B. DENT & SONS' ever reliable HIGH CLASS ENGLISH LEVER, best London made, Jewelled throughout in Rubies, Chronometer Balance dust and damp proof, for Home, Indian. or Colonial use; Warranted for Five Years, £5. In 18-carat Gold Cases, £12.

Wanted agents, at home and abroad, to obtain orders for watches and jowellery on our new instalment system, by weekly or monthly payments. Most beneficial to subscribers and agents. Also trustworthy men wanted in every ship, regiment, and battery to act as agents, to enable naval and military men to secure good, reliable watches at a small profit above the actual cost. Naval and military agents when leaving the service, desirous of being appointed district agents or travellers, are invited to apply for the post; but preference will be given to those agents who precure the most orders during their agency in the service. The means of earning a good income were never before placed so casily in the reach of intelligent, energetic naval or military men retiring from the service. Terms and catalogues free.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it there is no tear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—£tateswan, October 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written undermy own name —J. W. KAYE, Athensum Club, June 23 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sen e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout ts-career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contri-butors, but has done much to help forward the recon-struction of our system of governing India.—Westminster-Review.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTRILY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian veople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally doctle and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throught out England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DIAMANTÉ BRILLIANTS.

The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS originally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Messrs. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hithertoattained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Parls Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand monde and slite of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Parls, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 18-Carat Gold by the best Diamond Setters, exactly in the manner of the finestBrazilian Diamonds.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 3, 1888.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 16th March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 14th March; and from Calcutta to the 13th

AT the three final meetings of the Legislative Council to be held at Calcutta before the Government left it was understood that the Select Committee's report on the Bill amending the Civil Procedure Code would be presented on March 10 and passed March 23; the Patents Bill to be passed March 16, and the Debtors Bill March 23.

THE Municipal Bill has been read a second time in the Bengal Legislative Council, when it was decided to adopt the proposal for changing the title of President of the Corporation into that of Mayor, and the Town Council into that of Corporation.

THE Judges of Cawnpore and Gorakhpur, Messrs. Blennerhassett and Lenpott, take leave shortly. Their places will be filled respectively by Mr. G. J. Nicholls, Judge of Ghazipur, and Mr. W. Burkitt, who is returning from leave. Mr. W. F. Fox, Joint Magistrate of Gorakhpur, officiates in the Ghazipur Judgeship.

THE Collectorships of Saharanpore and Azamgarh will also be open during the hot weather. Mr. W. Irvine, of the former District, having obtained ten months' fur-lough, and Mr. P. Waller, of the latter, six months, on private affairs.

COLONEL JARRETT, Secretary to the Board of Examiners, contemplates taking leave this hot weather, and Colonel A. C. Toker, of the Military Department, will probably act for him.

Mr. J. J. LIVESAY has been permitted to resign the Bengal Civil Service from the 7th of March.

COLONEL BADCOCK, Officiating Commissary-General has gone to Burma to examine the working of the Commissariat Department in the new Province.

It is probable that Major J. Davidson will officiate as Deputy Secretary in the Military Department for Colonel Toker when the latter leaves to officiate for Colonel Jarrett on the Board of Examiners.

CAPTAIN S. D. GORDON, 19th Bengal Lancers, has been confirmed as an Assistant Secretary in the Military Department (vice Colonel Hay, doceased), with effect

Mr. Crawley has been transferred from Bombay to Lahore to act for Mr. Larpent, suspended in the University examinations case. Mr. Donald, the Deputy Accountant-General at Madras, will be back from leave towards the end of March, and Mr. Sim, C.S., will probably revert-Among the Assistants Mr. F. J. Atkinson has just been appointed Assistant Accountant-General in the Military Department, and will be succeeded at the Calcutta Currency Office by Mr. Koene. Mr. Cowley has just proceeded on a year's furlough from Burma, and Mr. Anthony is, we hear, likely to take furlough before long.

THE case in which Mr. Dickson, Travelling Inspector of Accounts on the East Indian Railway, brings an action against that company for wrongful dismissal, is likely to come up soon at Calcutta. Plaintiff claims Rs. 75,000

THE Goa Government have sanctioned an increase in the petroleum duty in accordance with the recent resolution of the British Government.

A PORTION of the Gun Factory at Ishapore has been burnt down.

THE Madras Government has decided that Councillors in the mofussil are entitled to inspect all municipal records at the office, but that none should be removed without the permission of the Chairman.

PERTAB SINGH, the political prisoner, who, it was stated at the time of his arrest, was intimately associated with Dhulip Singh's movement in India, managed to effect his escape from the District Jail, though closely guarded by a sergeant and two constables.

BOMBAY has been the first to complete its returns regarding the cost of civil justice. So far from a profit resulting from the court fees, it appears that Government lose 10½ lakhs yearly.

BURMA was expressly excluded from the direct scope of the Public Service Commission's inquiries. This decision was arrived at because of the very exceptional circumstances which prevail in that province.

Mr. O'Conor has not sat still under the sharp criticisms recently passed on some of the figures in his "Review of India's Foreign Trade" by Mr. Robert Steel. A Note of Mr. O'Conor's, in reply, has already been sent officially to the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce.

THE Calcutta University Examinations are now being held at the various centres, a month earlier than in recent years, thus causing the loss of a month's work in the spring, while the examinations will be over six weeks before the colleges close for the hot weather vacation.

CAPTAIN S. D. GORDON, 19th Bengal Lancers, has been confirmed as an Assistant Secretary in the Military Department (vice Colonel Hay, deceased), with effect from 10th February.

THE Financial Department will share with others in the usual spring changes. Among the Accountants-General, Mr. Finlay, who has been acting at Allahabad since Mr. Tupp's transfer to Bombay in December last, takes twenty months' furlough, and will be succeeded by Mr. Jacob, who has previously twice acted in the appointment. Mr. Clogstoun, Accountant-General of Madras, will, it is believed, take furlough in April or May, and will probably be succeeded by Mr. Rawlins, who is at present on furlough, but returns at the end of April. There will be no changes as far as is known in the other three Accountant-Generalships.

Among the Comptrollers Mr. Hamilton takes three months' leave, and Mr. Brereton acts for him at Nagpur. Mr. Barrow, C.S., Deputy Accountant-General, has taken four months' leave to England, and Mr. R. N. Ray has leen transferred from Calcutta to Bombay to act for him.

NOTES.

THERE has evidently been a dearth of news of any amportance to telegraph from Galcutta during the past week, as the Times correspondent has been obliged to content himself with a speech delivered by an old Rajpoot at Ajmere to an assembly of representatives which had met for the purpose of passing rules for social reform with reference to the extravagant expenditure on marriage and other ceremonies. A rule was passed at this meeting establishing the marriageable age at eighteen years for men and fourteen for girls. If the Rajpoots will adhere to this resolution some good will have been effected.

Bur little good, we imagine, was effected by the old gentleman referred to, wandering from the questions of social reform into a dissertation about how in past times the Mahomedans and Mahrattas had depopulated Rajputana, and sprinkled the soil with Rajput blood. At the captare of Chitor, said the speaker, 40,000 inoffensive citizens had been massacred. "Jehangir had ordered the legs to be cut from the bodies of Kahars who had appeared while he was out shooting. Shah Jehan had compelled men to fight tigers and leopards, and when the people complained of taxation Alamgir had ordered them to be trodden down by elephants. Besides taking the lives and property of the people, the Mussulman Emperors had property of the renormities, even demanding the sisters and daughters of conquered chiefs for the harem. The Mahrattas had been as bad; indeed, the excesses committed by them were beyond description. Mado Singh had paid Holkar ten millions. Holkar, Scindia, and the Peishwa had reduced Poongerpore, Banswara, and Partabgarh to an abject condition, and had the British Government failed to come to the rescue nothing could have saved Oodeypore, Serohi, Poongerpore, Banswara, and Partabgarh. Impending ruin had threatened to engulf the whole of Rajpootana when help arrived."

All this is no doubt historically true, but although the Times correspondent sees in the "political significance" of the speech only a desire to show gratitude for the benefits resulting from English government, it may have had another significance—namely, to stir up bad blood against the Mahomedans and Mahrattas to-day. This sort of thing should not be encouraged. The Rajpoots when in power were not models of virtue and forbearance themselves, and it is just as well that the dead past of history should be allowed to bury its dead now. No good can come of stirring up old race antipathies in India to-day.

SIR SYED ARMED has been delivering another political espeech at Mecrut, in which he also declared that his cobject was not to stir up race antagonism but to prevent his co-religionists from being led into a political trap. He also returns thanks for British rule:—"It is necessary," he said, "that those who have conquered India should maintain the Empire on a strong basis. To attempt to establish representative government in a country subject to a foreign race is utterly vain. If we join the political movement of the Bengalees the nation will reap loss. We do not want to become subjects of the Hindoos. Avoid abusing your rulers. Do not call Englishmen tyrants, and thacken columns on columns of the newspapers with such attacks. You can gain nothing in that way. God has made them your rulers, and we should be content with the will of God. We should hold ourselves aloof from this political uproar, and try to improve the education of our race."

Now, without wishing to apply to the Natives of India the cynical aphorism that gratitude is a lively sense of favours to come, we confess that we do not admire this sort of speechifying on the part of Mahomedans, Rajputs, or Hindus. Whether sincere or not, it does not help to strengthen, as some think, our rule in India, which ought to be strong enough without the aid of stump oratory.

The evil effect lies in the fear of engendering strife between races whose love for each other is not likely to develop under such oratory. "Divide et impera" is a wise maxim to act upon in certain cases, but British rule in India will not be consolidated by it now.

THE report of the Public Service Commission is a comprehensive and able one, dealing as it does with so many subjects of the highest importance. But its recommendations will hardly be accepted without considerable criticism, especially from quarters which will be affected by the charges proposed. How will the "Covenanted" regard proposals which, if carried out in their integrity, must reduce largely the prizes which have hitherto been the monopoly of that service?

On one recommendation, that the designations "Covenanted" and "Uncovenanted" should be done away with, the former being replaced by the term "Imperial Civil Service," and the latter by that of "Provincial Civil Service," one of our Anglo-Indian contemporaries to hand by the present mail remarks:—

Since it is desired to place the two services on a footing of equality one of them should not be placed at the disadvantage of being branded as Provincial in the eyes of an Imperial and imperious rival. The stigma is made the more marked by the explanation that it will carry with it an indication of the difference existing between the fields of recruitment, the "Imperial" Service being recruited in England and the "Provincial" in India! Is not India, then, Imperial? Is her Imperial Majesty so designated from ruling over a Province? We imagined that on the 1st January, 1877, India shed its Provincial swaddling clothes, and stood forth in the purple robes of Empire. Why not differentiate the two classes of public servants by according to one the designation "Imperial Civil Service of India," as suggested, and according to the other the equally sonorous and dignified if somewhat briefer title, "Indian Civil Service"? The Indian Civil Service will not be provincialised or put out of conceit with itself by such a designation. By virtue of being recognised as Indian par excellence it will be as Imperial as reasonable ambition can desire, and there will be no heartburning when members of the two services meet on "a footing of social equality."

It has often been asked, "What's in a name?" since Juliet put the question to herself, but there has always been much—indeed, too much—in a name in India. The term "Uncovenanted," if not one of reproach, signified in olden days a lower grade of social caste—for there is white caste in India as well as black—to that of the "Heavenborn" or "Covenanted" Service. Those days it is to be hoped have gone not to return, and so far it is wise that the invidious term "Uncovenanted" should go too, but what improvement on it can lie in the change of the term to "Provincial?" Little that we can see.

THE Times of India says that the report will no doubt be severely criticised by the vernacular Press, because the Commissioners have not been able to gratify all the aspirations of the Native public, but it adds:—"The sensible members of the Native Press must acknowledge that if the recommendations of the Commission are fairly carried into execution, a great advance will have been made towards giving the Natives a large and responsible share in the administration of their country. The time must come when the Native public will acknowledge the debt of gratitude they owe to the Commission. The recommendations made are not those of wild theorists, but of men conversant with affairs, who are anxious to give Natives every privilege compatible with the safety and welfare of the Empire."

Mr. C. F. O'Neal, writing to the Pioneer, says that "in the month of May, 1182 (sic), Mr. Le Breton, C.I.E., a brother of the famous Jersey Lily, was mauled by a tiger at Abu, and from the effects of the mauling he died after lingering for a week." Mr. O'Neal "had the infinite satisfaction" of avenging Mr. Le Breton's death. The tiger was found to be 10 feet 8 inches in length. He bagged the female a few days later, and she measured 9 feet something. "Both the skins, I fancy, are now in the hands of Mr. Le Breton's father in Jersey."

WE are not aware whether any attempt has yet been made here to "boom" Indian gold mines from the pulpit, but it has been done in India. The Rev. A. W. L. Smith, Chaplain in the Wynard District, in the course of a sermon preached at Pundalur, reminded his hearers of "how nobly and faithfully" Mr. Lyon, the manager of the Indian Consolidated Gold Mines, had worked for his employers. "By exercising economy, by scrupulously attending to every detail, he made these mines flourish, and rendered the property profitable to its shareholders". exordium of this kind from a sacred edifice ought to have sent up the shares. Jobbers and promoters of companies in London ought to invite some reverend gentlemen to preach up shares here.

SIXTY-EIGHT millions of postcards passed through the Indian Post Office last year, an increase of eight millions on the previous year, notwithstanding that there was a falling off of half a million in the reply-cards. This falling off has been the result of a reduction in the size of the reply-cards. The number of letters also increased by five millions. The success of the system of selling embossed envelopes for the price of the stamps is shown by a decrease of a million and a quarter in the number of up a decrease of a million and a quarter in the number of unmaid letters.

(Times Correspondents.)

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 1.

The Viceroy and Lady Dufferin left Calcutta on Thursday. A large number of European and Native gentlemen assembled at Government House to bid them farewell. The past week has been devoted by Lord Dufferin to the visiting of charitable public institutions. On Monday and Tuesday he received deputations from two Mahomedan associations, and on Tuesday lay also made an also beauty of the Native, and the deputations from two Mahomedan associations, and on Tuesday also made an elaborate tour of the Native portion of the town, including some of the worst plague-spots in the world. Subsequently he visited the High Court, and later received farewell visits from the foreign Consuls. On Wednesday he attended a debate in the Municipal Council. At the conclusion the Viceroy expressed his approval of the mode in which the debate had been conducted. The attempt at a hostile demonstration has entirely follow through and the prehostile demonstration has entirely fallen through, and the promoters failed to secure any support except among the students at the Government colleges. The subscription list for a statue to Lord Dufferin is being rapidly filled up, and already amounts to Rs. 37,000.

Very great discontent has been created among the higher branches of the uncovenanted Civil Service in consequence of the failure of the Government to remedy their grievances. The telegraph department, which is composed of men of scientific attainments, and includes for the most part extremely able and capable officials, has a special and additional ground of complaint. The grievances are admitted by the Government, but the recent resolution of the Government was totally ineffectual. As it fixed the 31st of March as the latest date for retirement, and offered an insufficient inducement to retire, by way of assisting promotion, no graded superintendent has retired. The situation is rendered still worse by the ruling of the Government that promotions will not depend on vacancies, but will be made at specified dates half-yearly. It is generally believed that the Secretary of State's despatch was much more liberal, and that it has been cut down and misinterpreted by the Government of India.

The Duc d Orleans preferred to remain with his shooting party instead of joining the Sikkim Field Force. He has enjoyed good sport, having bagged sixteen tigers, besides a large amount of other game. He recently had a narrow escape. A tigress charged his elephant, and succeeded in climbing into the howdah, which with some guns, she completely smashed. Ultimately the howdah gave way, and the tigress fell to the ground. The telegram unaccountably omits to state what became of the duke. for retirement, and offered an insufficient inducement to retire,

SIKKIM.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 1.

There is nothing important to record concerning affairs in Sikkim. The latest telegram from the camp at Lingtu states that the removal of the headquarters has been temporarily postponed owing to a change in the weather. Colonel Graham and his staff had visited Gnatong, five miles distant, and found it to be suitable for an encampment. The Colonel had subsequently visited the Tukola Pass, 13,500ft. above the sealevel. Heliographic communication has been established between Padong and Khenock. At Padong no local supplies were procurable, and melted snow had to be used in place of The country was entirely deserted up to the Jalaplo water.

Pass.

It is rumoured that 2,000 Tibetans are massing for the recapture of Lingtu. Unless the Chinese Government can induce the Tibetan authorities to adopt a more peaceful attitude, the Government of India may be compelled, however reluctantly, to bring the Tibetans to terms in their own country. A forward movement into Tibet would, however, only be adopted as a last resource to compel the Tibetan Government to abstain from an invasion of Sikkim. The present position is embarassing and somewhat ridiculous. The expeditionary force is unable either to advance or to retire, yet it has no enemy to contend with save the severe cold and the want of supplies. It is impossible that this state of things can be prolonged indefinitely. longed indefinitely.

BURMA.

RANGOON, APRIL 1

RANGOON, APRIL 1

According to the latest reports from Mogouk, Mr. Barrington Brown is still at the ruby mines, examining the district and boring. The exclusive right to purchase rubies found at the mines is still reserved to Streeter's syndicate.

On the return of the Northern Shan column to Mandalay Sir George White inspected the troops and addressed them in a very complimentary speech. He highly praised the tact and judgment shown by Major Yates, R.A., who was commander of the column, and dwelt on the good work done in extending Her Majesty's dominions to the Salween. Sir G. White said he attributed the excellent appearance of the men, who were all in health, to temperance and hard work. This column accomplished some remarkable marches. One detachment, under Captain H. C. Yate, with mule transport, did 117 miles in five days, through very difficult country.

The Tharrawaddy district in Lower Burma continues in a disturbed state. There are five dacoit gangs armed with guns in this district, but vigorous steps are being taken to crush them.

There is a good deal of cholera in Mandalay. The disease has also broken out at Prome, and the departure of troops from Upper Burma to India has been somewhat delayed, as it is considered unsafe for them to pass through Prome at

The revenue returns for Lower Burma for the year ending yesterday are almost complete. They are not so favourable as those of the previous year. There is a decrease in exports of about ten lakhs, and the expenditure has increased by some twelve lakhs. The surplus on last year's accounts, taking the rupee at the conventional rate, will amount to about one million and a-quarter sterling.

Somewhat severe scarcity is reported from several districts

INDIAN COMMANDS.

(Pioneer.)

Lord Lytton's Army Commission, as it is termed by the Bombay Gazette, did not vanish into thin air or soap bubbles, as our contemporary in its issue of Feb. 25 would have its readers believe, and it is a further misstatement of the case to say that the amalgamation of the Presidency armies was ever contemplated. On the contrary, the Commission designed the complete separation of the four proposed army corps, each being confined to its own recruiting ground. A succession of events has occurred since the Commission sent in its report to show conclusively the wisdom which led its members to recommend the placing of the three Presidency armies and the Punjab Frontier Force under one head, and it is only a question Commend the placing of the three Fresidency armies and the Punjab Frontier Force under one head, and it is only a question of time for this tocome to pass. It is red-tapeism of the most outrageous type for the Commander-in-Chief in India to have to ask the Government of India to direct the Government of Madras to instruct the Commander-in Chief of that Presidency Madras to instruct the Commander-in Chief of that Presidency to send a regiment from Trichinopoly to the Peiwar Kotal or to Quetta, and the sooner all such roundabout methods are swept into oblivion the better. The Bombay Gazette cannot but be aware of the many changes recommended by the Army Commission which have already been adopted and carried out. It is true that the Presidency commands have not yet been swept away, but this will assuredly come to pass. The abolition of these anomalous appointments will not in any way fuse the armies of India into one; the modern system on the contrary contemplates confining them more distinctly than before to their own grounds. The recorded dissent of General O'Connell and Sir Peter Lumsden from the recommendations of the Commission which they nevertheless signed is of no real value, and the transfer of the Punjab Frontier Force to the care of the Commander-in-Chief which they so much deprecated has actually taken place, and is the most practical answer to the protestations that were then put forward. The India of to-day is not what it was twenty years ago. To bring forward minutes written a quarter of a century ago for the sake of the distinguished names of their writers only reveals, in a matter like this, the poverty of the argument. Take, for instance, the rendition of Gwalior: would any military man about the Mutiny era have for a moment dreamt of such a measure being suggested, far less carried out? The formation of army corps under Lieutenant-Generals, and the relief of the Commander-in-Chief in India from all executive control, has become an absolute necessity for the military administration of this great country. The Commander-in-Chief should be freed from all executive control, and should be ever on the move in peaceful times to see for himself satisfactorily the actual requirements of the army corps under his command, and thus enable him by intimate association with commanders to keep the Supreme Government fully informed of all military requirements. Local Governments should possess no control whatever over military

A YEAR'S ADMINISTRATION IN BENGAL. (Englishman.)

The report of the administration of Bengal for the year 1886-87 has just been issued. It has been compiled by Dr. C. J. O'Donnell, C.S., who was placed on special duty for that purpose, and it is accompanied for the first time by a set of coloured maps, showing various administrative statistics. From one of the maps we see that the following districts are the most criminal, namely, the 24-Parganas, Howrah, Hughli, the Sonthal Parganas, Puri, Tippera, Noakhally, and a portion of Nuddea. The divisions of Behar and Chota Nagpur appear to be very free from crime, only about six persons on an average in 10,000 of the population having been convicted of offences under the Penal Code. The principal spirit-consuming tracts are Chota Nagpur, the Sonthal Parganas, the Behar Division (except Durbhanga), and Monghyr in the Bhagulpur. Division (except l'urbhanga), and Monghyr in the Bhaghipur Division. It is worthy of note that primary education appears to be as advanced in Kattak, Tippera, and Noakholly as in the 24-Parganas and Suburban districts. Under the Local Self-Government Act District Boards were established in sixteen districts, and the road cess and other local funds were amalga-mental into district funds and sheed under their control. The mated into district funds and placed under their control. The principal Acts passed were the so-called Ghee Act and an Act for the regulation of the Rural Police in the Chota Nagpur division. The former Act is probably only a precursor to more extensive legislation on the subject of the adulteration of correctible generally. Under the head of relies it is shown of comestibles generally. Under the head of police, it is shown that Bengal has fewer policemen and less cognizable crime in proportion to its population than any other province in India. The cost of the force employed on purely police work is 75 pies per head of the population. The most unsatisfactory feature of the criminal administration of the year was the fact that only 171 per cent. of alleged murderers actually put on trial were convicted. The jail death-rate reached the unpre-cedentedly low average of 372 per thousand. The year was one of rich harvests and comparative prosperity, the prices of the chief food-grains reaching in many parts of the province the lowest limit recorded during the past ten years was a net increase in imperial revenue of Rs. 14,98,339, which was chiefly due to a revival of the import trade in salt, a more favourable settlement of outstills, and the introduction of the income-tax. One of the maps incorporated with the summary shows the incidence of the land revenue per acre in different districts, and is thus at the same time an index to the prosperity districts, and is thus at the same time an index to the prosperity of different portions of Bengal at the time the permanent settlement was concluded. In the larger part of the province the land-tax varies from only four to eight annas per acre; it is only in the districts of 24-Parganas Howrah, Hughli, Nuddea, Patna, and a portion of Rurdwan, that it exceeds one rupee per acre. In Chota Nagpore, the Tributary States of Orissa, and the Hill Tracts of Chittagong, the assessment does not exceed half an anna an acre. The number of vernacular newspapers published during the year was sixty-three, of which seven were monthly and six daily, while as many as forty-six were weekly publications. The spontaneous expression of loyal sentiments on the occasion of Her Majesty's Jubilee stood out as a bright feature amidst much objectionable writing. writing.

ANGLO-INDIAN SPELLING.

(Bombay Gazette.) There are words and sentences freely used in India supposed at least to be of Hindustani derivation, which are so distorted into an Anglo-Indian vernacular that they have lost their true meaning, become a mere jumble of misplaced letters and syllables, very far removed from the original bat, even in sound The oracle Forbes, with stinging contempt, warns us against the irrational talk of the jargonists of bygone days, who acquired a villainous smattering of Hindustani by the ear only, setting at defiance all rules of grammar and propriety. Yet all the years that have passed since that was printed, and all the protest from powerful pens have been but of little avail. The jargon is in full force still.

One Rogers, in an excellent manual, also speaks against the practice of incorrect spelling and pronunciation so frequently indulged in, such as bobberchy-conner for bawarchi-khana, bun-galow for bangla, sepoy for sipahi, &c.; yet so curiously have hese more than common instances taken root among the English-speaking people living in India that the hand halts over writing the correct words, fearing an accusation of pedantry or ignorance. A very slight acquaintance with Hindustani produces a feeling of aggravation at finding the simple words, expressing their own meaning if left alone, have been meddled with and murdered into a condition beyond recognition at all.

An advertisement appears in a paper fact the Gazettel of the sale. An advertisement appears in a paper (not the Gazette) of the sale of Foolcarries. There is no such word, no such thing. It is Phul-Kari or flower, the p and h sounded separately, and not like fool at all. Sheer curiosity takes the Griffins to the purchase of this startling novelty, under the impression that it is some sort of vehicle, perhaps suitable to some one or other; but his first lesson in Hindustani proper teaches him the simple word for flower, and the context speedily suggests itself. Why our own ever hard k could not have held the place of the Indian one without twisting itself into a variable c, no one seems to know, and the mighty Nimrod of statistics and mistakes—great is his system and shall prevail!—as far as the general public is concerned, seems to have but laboured in vain; and surely from the lack of a little more strength in unity among those who should and could make it a matter of interest. Cooly Curry, Campore, Deccan, Octacamund, are Kuli Kari, Kanpur, Dekkan, Utakamand and so on, ad infinitum; and these corrections, though so much nearer right and so different, may be faulty still. The absolutely accurate is not strained at. Even last year's Engineer's Report gives the simple name of Amraoti as Oomrawattee-four superfluous letters.

The Natives themselves now pander to this pernicious practice and torture their own names, Mudeliar and Munisami into Moody liar and Moony Sammy, to meet the fatally false and fanciful phoneticism so evidently required by English ears, while at the same time they condense our words to sounds with keener spirit of adaptitude which at least has the virtue of brevity and economy, for instance, Klj for college. Protest might become as passionate as that of the late King of Siam over our senseless way of spelling the names of foreign cities. over our senseless way of spelling the names of foreign cities, whereas the "most ignorantest of his peoples" would never write Lundun because so pronounced, though with far more reason. The subject is inexhaustible. Griffins must really believe but little they see and but half they hear of the Anglo-Indian vernacular; for even a scholar in Hindustani or rather a glib speaker in it will be too frequently found prope to fall ato a sort of vulgar patois, and talk of a Rajjer (Raja) and his Molly (Mali) if he wants his gardener, while he invariably says a Dawk (Dak) to the Ghaut (Ghat). Faults will reveal themselves at leisure, but the wrong thing to begin with should be avoided. It leaves so much to unlearn.

The Apollo Bunder is an appalling blunder, and gives a perverse greeting to the new-comer. Mazagon is Mazgaon, and Jeejeebhoy still too frequently prevails. It is not so written that may be spelt with ease. There is no such thing as a Pagoda. This is a mere perversion or travesty of the word like the rest. It took a Sala to find out Kari for the million, and it is Shiraz Zoe, who tells us that Pagoda is a kind of verbal hysteron proteron for the Cingalese Dhagoba—from the Sanskrit dhatu garba, a relic shrine, and what of Godown, Monsoon, Hobson Jobson, and Nabob, still a fancied Cressus of the East? The former words, according to various authors, were like Káji hopelessly Anglicised long ago, and will now bear no interference with or reinterior interference with or reinter station into Girdam or Mausim, but Nawabs are getting common, and it is ludicrous to hear the spectacle of the Moharam, mon, and it is ludicrous to hear the spectacle of the Monaram, which is half-described by the simple names of Hassan and Hossein, tortured even into an Anglo-Franco tongue as at the Mauritius, where, on asking the meaning of the Tabut and its followers, one is told: "C'est la procession de Hobson Jobson!" In the far region of South Africa, the Kafir names, much less important, stand untampered with on station platforms, yet both eye and understanding are affronted at every sign and street corner, and at almost every halting stage on the railways from Sion to Maisur, and so on to a Cape called Comorin, and why? In many cases, carefully correct and accurately accented names of places are introduced, making the puzzle the greater between the old misplaced as and us, &c.

The different sounds of the letter a broad are likely to remain a vexed question; Nepal is still what Victor Hugo calls an os, a ranger, and Punjab eternally mispronounced; for—and it is with extreme diffidence the writer calls attention to the fact—the great Forbes himself, after the pungent final paragraph of the preface to his universally-esteemed manual, in which he says: "Let it be remembered, as a general rule, that vowels are to be sounded as in Italian and German—a pronunciation readily recognized by all the civilised world—exemplifies the broad a still further with the words war and water—which is contradictory and, surely, simply incorrect. The accented a is like the ordinary broad letter ask on an English tongue. The abovementioned Rogers also gives a as in father, art, all, wall, fall, Paul, and pass—quite different sounds.

sounds. There is no such thing as a "Wallah." It is a word added to a noun as an agent, wala, wals, mas, fem., and plural, he who, she who, they who, according to action specified. Paniwala, he who has to do with water, &c. While there are so many of the "Sahib log," who, all unconsciously, of course, drop the first r in library, who would scorn to do so in Secretary and Sanatorium, appears to find favour with quite classic folk, it scarcely seems worth while to quibble over a mere borrowed tongue often only used as a social medium and expressed with indifference so long as the meaning is understood; but a o'orienter is the fashion nowadays, and it cannot be done properly through the medium of the Anglo-Indian tongue as she, in defiance of even fair phoneticism, too frequently "is spoke."

THE FRONTIER STATES. (Madras Times.)

(Madras Times.)

The insecurity of life and property at almost every point along the frontier of our Empire from Chittagong to Kurrachee, and the frequency with which raids are made into British territory; must show us that most of the independent States on the other side of the border have but very imperfect—if any—ideas of the position and powers of the Government which they openly defy. Indeed, the history of the wars on our frontiers bears ample testimony of this by the trouble and expense, not to mention the loss of valuable lives, that have been incurred in endeavouring to induce the several tribes and States, if not to live at peace among themselves, at least to States, if not to live at peace among themselves, at least to respect the persons and property of those dwelling under British rule. Though the expeditions that have been undertaken have invariably accomplished their object—generally that of redress—seldom has any very permanent settlement to speak of been achieved, but more frequently on the with drawal of our troops, the same spirit of disregard, perhaps covert but still evident, as before has been manifested. The tribes upon the North-West Frontier, against whom so many petty expeditions were despatched, have always shown more or petty expeditions were despatched, have always shown more or less restlessness; but it is more than probable that the accounts of India which the Khyber Maliks, on their return to their country, will give, will induce many others of the chieftains of those parts to undertake journeys through India; and this can have but one effect, that of convincing them of the comparative insignificance of their country, and inability to disregard or defy the Government of India with impunity. Such adorrable weather will be the moons of keeping at least one a desirable result will be the means of keeping at least one portion of our frontier quiet. However, before our present Viceroy leaves India other parts of the frontier must engage a considerable amount of the attention of the Government. The Burmese frontier has not yet been delimitated, and this may be found somewhat difficult to accomplish. In Kashmir, the recent raid on the Gilgit frontier has passed, apparently unrecent raid on the Gight frontier has passed, apparently unnoticed by the Government of that State; and we are informed that detailed intelligence of the affair is entirely repressed.
There are many reasons for Government of India interference in Kashmir affairs, and the importance of the late frontier raid is not likely to be altogether passed unnoticed. The whole of the affairs of Kashmir are reported to be in a deplorable model through the including the Dorsen Tunkmen Dose muddle, through the inability of the Dewan Luchman Dass, muddle, through the inability of the Dewan Luchman Dass, to whose hands the government of the country, since the death of the late Rajah, has been entrusted. One account of the state of affairs in Kashmir describes "empty treasury with clamorous creditors; H.H. the Maharajah's own allowance obtained with difficulty; little business, except in the way of scandals, being done; and everybody waiting for the smash—such is the position of Jammu to-day." Again, on the Chittagong frontier retribution must sooner or later be dealt out to the perpetrators of the raid in the Saichal Valley. Nepaul is, and has been for some time, in a most unsettled state, and it is quite likely that the Government of India will find itself called upon to interfere. Bhere Shumshere, the Minister of Nepaul. quite likely that the Government of India will find itself called upon to interfere. Bhere Shumshere, the Minister of Nepaul, has departed from Calcutta, but absolutely nothing is known of the results of his visit to the Viceroy, and the deliberations with the late Resident of Nepaul and the authorities of the Foreign Office, beyond the announcement in the Pioneer—made in the "lucid style" for which that journal is celebrated —which informs us that "Bhere Shumshere has accomplished all he came for which was to show to the neonle of Nepaul all he came for, which was to show to the people of Nepaul that he was on friendly terms with the Viceroy, and had his support." This, however, is a very insufficient explanation of the termination of what were considered to be important negotiations. The affairs in Sikkim have assumed a more serious aspect; and a force has been already despatched to that country. In the meantime, Lord Dufferin pays a visit to Darjeeling, and the Rajah of Sikkim has been informed that if he wishes to meet the Viceroy during the three days that his Excellency will be at Darjeeling he will be received. But, as the Rajah of Sikkim acknowledges, to a certain extent, the suzerainty of the Llama of Thibet, it is possible that the meeting will not take place. In the meantime, a force under Colonel Graham, R.A., is marching towards the Sikkim frontier, and will be prepared, in a very short time, to enter that State. We are informed by a contemporary that "the one sole object of the exhibition is to turn the Thibetans out of Lingtu if they are still there on the 15th instant, but care will be taken to guard other points on the Sikkim frontier so as to prevent any raids that might be made to cause a diversion." It is believed that the Thibetans, when once they find that the Government of India is in earnest, will open negotiations; but this is merely speculation. The Thibetans are under the rule of China to a great extent, and any negotiations they may propose, would, in the natural course of things, emanate from Pekin. The result of the expedition will entirely depend upon how far the Celestial Government may care to go in supporting the Thibetans in the Sikkim affair.

A LOAFER ON THE ECONOMIC CRISIS. (Pioneer.)

He was, as usual, wonderfully drunk, and the gift of speech came down upon him. The conversation—he was a great politician this loafer—had turned on the poverty of India. "Poor!" said he, "Of course it's poor. Oh yes! D—d poor! And I'm poor, an' you're poor, altogether. Do you expect people will give you money without you ask 'em. No. I tell you, Sir, there's enough money in Injia to pave Hell with if you could only get at it. I've kep' servants in my day. Did they ever leave me without a hundred or a hundred and fifty you could only get at it. I've kep' servants in my day. Did they ever leave me without a hundred or a hundred and fifty put by—and never touched? You mark that. Does any black man who has been in Guv'ment service go away without hundreds an' hundreds put by—and never touched? You mark that. Money! The place stinks o' money—just kept out o' sight. Do you ever know a Native that didn't say Gurib admi? They've been sayin' Gurib admi so long that the Guy'ment learns to believe'em and now they're all bein' treated Guv'ment learns to believe'em, and now they're all bein' treated Guv'ment learns to believe'em, and now they're all bein' treated as though they was paupers. I'm a pauper, an' you're a pauper—we 'aven't got anything hid in the ground—an' so's every white man in this forsaken country. But the Injian he's a rich man. How do I know? Because I've tramped on foot or warrant pretty well from one end of the place to the other, an' I know what I'm talkin' about, and this ere Guv'ment goes peckin' an' fiddlin' over its tuppenny-ha'penny little taxes as if it was afraid. Which it is. You see how they do things in ——. It's six sowars here and ten sowars there, and—'Pay up, you brutes, or we'll pull your ears over your head. And when they've taken all they can get, the headman, he says:—'This is a dashed poor yield. I'll come again.' Of course the people digs up something out of the ground, and they pay. I know the way it's done, and I'll come again. Of course the people digs up something out of the ground, and they pay. I know the way it's done, and that's the way to do it. You can't go to an Injian an' say:— 'Look here. Can you pay me five rupees?' He say:—'Gurib admi,' of course, an' would say it if he was as rich as a banker. But if you send half-a-dozen sowars at him and shift the thatch off of his roof, he'll pay. Guv'ment can't do that? I don't suppose it could. There is no reason why it shouldn't. But it might do something like it, to show that it wasn't going to have no nonsense. Why, I'd undertake to raise a hundred million—what am I talking of?—a hundred and fifty million pounds from this country was and are and it wouldn't be strained. from this country per annu-um, and it wouldn't be strained then. One hundred and fifty millions you could raise as easy as then. One hundred and fifty millions you could raise as easy as paint, if you just made these ere Injians understand that they had to pay an' make no bones about it. It's enough to make a man sick to go in over yonder to—— and see what they do and then come an' see what we do. Perfectly sickenin' it is. Borrer money! Why the country could pay herself an' everything she wants if she was only made to do it. It's this bloomin' Gurib admi swindle that's been going on all these years, that has made fools o' the Guv'ment." Then he became egotistical, this ragged ruffian who conceived that he knew the road to illimitable wealth and told the story of his life, interspersed with anecdotes that would blister the paper they were written on. But through all his ravings, he stuck to his hundred and fifty million theory, and though the listener dissented from him and the brutal crudity with which his views were stated, him and the brutal crudity with which his views were stated, an unscientific impression remained, and was not to be shaken off. Across the Border one feels that the country is being used, exploited, "made to sit up," so to speak. In our territories the feeling is equally strong of wealth "just round the corner," as the loafer said, and a people wrapped up in cotton wool and ungetatable. Will any man, who really knows something of a little piece of India, and has not the fear of running counter to custom before his eyes, explain how this impression is produced, and why it is an erroneous one?

BENGAL.

Mr. J. F. DUTHIE is now in Calcutta, and his completed work on "Indigenous Fodder Grasses" will shortly be pub-

THE Municipal Bill embodies a local tax of four annas a case on petroleum, so that, with the Imperial tax, Calcutta will have to pay twelve annas a case.

THE Englishman states that a well-known gentleman residing in Calcutta has offered Rs. 10,000 towards the building or purchase of accommodation for a Lady Dufferin Zenana Hospital for Women and Children, provided the Bengal Branch of the National Association can find Rs. 15,000 for the same object.

LORD DUFFERIN has recently received an addition to the numerous decorations which he has the privilege of wearing. His Excellency comes within the category of those entitled to the Burma medal, and the other day received that decoration. Those members of the Viceroy's staff who accompanied his Excellency to Burma in 1886 have been similarly decorated.

MAJOR JOHN ROBERTSON, C.I.E., late of the Accounts Branch of the Military Department, Bengal, leaves India on retirement. Before his departure from Calcutta he was entertained at the United Service Club by Colonel Pritchard in the name of his office colleagues, and later by General Chesney and the officers of the Military Department, when a phoney and the best was presented to him. Major Robertson tograph of his hosts was presented to him. Major Robertson is a man who both in office and out of it will be greatly missed.

A MEETING has been held at the Calcutta Chamber of Commerce to consider what steps should be taken in recognition of the services of his Excellency Lord Dufferin as Viceroy of India. There was a very representative assembly of all races—Sir Alexander Wilson in the chair. It was resolved to ask the Sheriff to call a public meeting; and a requisition was signed in the room to that effect. A committee was also appointed to draw up an address, and make the necessary arrangements for the public meeting on the 22nd March. Mr. S. E. J. Clarke was requested to act as secretary.

WITH regard to the recent inquiry into the outstill system WITH regard to the recent inquiry into the outstill system in the Hooghly and Burdwan districts which Mr. Westmacott has been making, it has been decided to send a Bengal official of some standing to Bombay, and perhaps also to Madras, to study the working of the Excise systems in those Presidencies. Mr. Westmacott was suggested as the fittest person for this roving appointment; but he is about to succeed Mr. Alexander in the Burdwan Commissionership, and the work falls to Mr. C. E. Buckland, Junior Secretary to the Board of Revenue, who is to be placed on special duty for six months for the purpose of the inquiry.

MADRAS.

LADY CONNEMARA has left Madras for Coonoor, to await the Governor's arrival there, and then proceed to Ooty.

THE Prince of Arcot is still too ill to go out. The Governor paid a State visit to him.

THE Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army has returned to headquarters from Madras.

THE Governor inspected the Madras Volunteer Guards. As an old Volunteer he laid great stress upon the importance of accurate shooting. He was much pleased with the marchaccurate shooting. He was much pleas past, especially of the Mounted Infantry.

THE transfer of Coorg to a Sub-Collectorate of the Madras Presidency is not popular with the Native and European inhabitants of Coorg. Meetings are being held to protest against the proposal, and to memorialise the Viceroy to maintain Coorg under the present Commissioner, or to form it into a separate Collectorate.

The Gaekwar having gone to the Neilghiries for the benefit of his health will not move much in society, nor will he receive visitors. He has been advised to take perfect rest. His Highness has asked his former dewan, Rajah Sir T. Madawa Row, to spend a few days with him in the hills.

Mr. J. Dec. Atkins, C.S., Under-Secretary to Government, Revenue, Financial, and General Departments, has been allowed privilege leave for three months.

Colonel H. N. Reeves, Political Agent, Kolhapur and Southern Mahratta Country, has been granted special leave on argent private affairs for six months.

Mr. J. DAVIDSON, C.S., First Assistant Collector, Nasik, takes privilege leave of absence for two months and twelve days. Mr. C. E. Frost acts for him.

Mr. F. G. Selby, B.A., acts as Principal, Rajkumar College, in the Second Grade of the Educational Department, during the absence of Mr. C. Macnaghten, M.A.

THE balloting at the Chamber of Commerce for three elective trustees of the Port of Bombay resulted in the reelection of Mr. S. D. Sassoon (of Messrs. D. Sassoon and Co.) and Mr. J. G. Smith (of Messrs. Ritchie, Steuart and Co.). For the third vacancy, an equal number of votes having been registered for Messrs. J. L. Symons and H. W. Uloth, these gentlemen, according to the rules, have to be balloted for areain again.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

THE HON. SYED MAHMOOD, Judge of the North-West Provinces High Court, was married, on the 5th inst., at Delhi, to a daughter of the Nawab Sharfuddin of Delhi. Over two thousand guests sat down to the dinner which was given in honour of the occasion, and a large sum of money was distributed among the poor.

THE kharif season in the North-West Provinces and Oudh seems to have been generally unfavourable, and the area under cultivation decreased by 139,416 acres, or about one per cent. This was owing in a great measure to the irregularity of the rains. Rice and cotton suffered severely, and in some districts the cultivators must have been hard put to it. A little more or a little less rain might have brought a large area of country into serious distress.

HIS HIGHNESS THE RAJAH OF FARIDROT, who was lately charged by the chief Punjab paper with showing sympathy for "England's implacable foe," has tendered to the Punjab Government assurances of his faithful devotion to Her Majesty's Government, and of his readiness at all times of emergency to render such assistance to the Government of India as the resources of his State afford. In reply, the Lieutenant-Governor's cordial acknowledgments of his Highness's loyal offer have been conveyed to the Rajah.

Serious defalcations have been discovered in the accounts of the Persian Gulf Telegraph Office at Kurrachee, amounting to Rs. 9,000. A warrant has been issued for the arrest of Mr. Alimo, the accountant.

LUNCH and legislation seem to be closely associated in Mauritius. In the proceedings of the Council of Government the following extraordinary passage is reported:—"M. E. Antelme withdrew the following questions: Whether it is to the knowledge of Government that, under the administration of Sir John Pope Hennessey, Governor and Commander-in Chief of Mouriting and Decread Appears the members of Council Chief of Mauritius and Dependencies, the members of Council entrusted with inquiries were properly treated, and wanted nothing in regard to their lunch? Whether it was by Government authority that Mr. Angus, Acting Storekeeper-General, was guilty of sending to Beau Bassin eighteen sandwiches and eighteen small cakes—the whole enclosed in paper—without either napkins, plates, knives, or glasses?—such lunch being intended for five elected morphorecompanies are to far Comintended for five elected members composing part of a Committee entrusted with the examination of certain public works."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE following Burma Field Force order has been published:—"Lieutenant Colonel C. F. Fhomas, Military Accounts Department, having been deputed by the Government of India to investigate the current military expenditure connected with the occupation of Upper Burma, the books of all military dis-bursing officers in the Field Force will be freely placed before him for scrutiny whenever he proposes to inspect them, and every facility afforded him in carrying out the duties."

DEPUTY SURGEON-GENERAL E. H. ROBERTS, Allahabad Circle, proceeds home almose immediately, on the recommendation of a Medical Board, and in anticipation of leave.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL J. N. STEEL, 2nd in command 25th Punjab Infantry, is retiring from the Service. This officer is in England.

CAPTAIN A. H. LANE, Bengal Staff Corps, officiating wing commander 28th Punjab Infantry, has been allowed to send in his papers for retirement from the service.

THE 2nd Queen's has arrived at Umballa. The regiment went to Burma shortly after the commencement of hostilities in the Upper Province, and was then something like 900 strong; but what with volunteers for mounted infantry, time-expired men who have left the corps and about seventy (including two officers) who were killed in action, from accidents, or died from illness, it returns to India with half that number. The remnant, however, look remarkably fit, and just the stamp of officers and men to render the excellent service the regiment has in the course of the apprexation and pacification of ment has in the course of the annexation and pacification of our latest acquisition.

OFFICERS and Engineers of the Indian Marine, on special duty in England, will, on arrival in England, receive the full

THE Government of India consider that in army contracts, THE Government of Indus consider that in army contracts, as a rule, the lowest tender should be accepted, as otherwise competition would cease, and the supply would practically become a monopoly in the hands of a few men. It rests entirely with officers of a department to see that only supplies of the standard quality are received, and to enforce the penalties if the contractor fails to fulfil his agreement satisfactorily.

A JOURNALISTIC EXPERIENCE IN RANGOON.

Running a paper in Rangoon is evidently good training for an editorial career in the Wild West. An account is given of a lively encounter between the editor of the leading provincial journal and a light of the local Bar, in which it appears the gentleman of the wig and gown was at once the aggressor and the victim. On the 11th February the barrister taxed the editor with publishing certain verses referring to him, and demanded an apology, a demand which was resented. The editor may be left to tell what followed:—

"Before we knew what his intention was, he struck us two blows, one on the temple and another on the mouth, with his clenched fists. Then there was a merry little mill for the course of about three minutes, in which we trust Mr. Hare for course of about three minutes, in which we trust Mr. Hare for once knew what it is to catch a Tartar, or to meddle with an Editor. Our three years' training in a London gymnasium, though that was twenty years ago, was found not to have been altogether thrown away, and we shall be surprised if Mr. Hare has not been blessed with a lovely pair of black eyes. However, it was dark, and the damage done could not be seen; we can only judge of results from our being able to put in five or six neat little knucklers on his frontispiece—of course as a matter purely of self-defence. But our modesty prevents us from saying more than that we were able to ward off his wild blows after the two first cowardly ones with which he took us unawares, and that there is not even a scratch on our benign countenance to disturb the serenity of even the most nervous of our admiring lady friends. We do not complain, nor shall we take the legal proceedings we at first contemplated. We shall not give Mr. Hare the satisfaction of inferring that we seek either police or legal protection from any fear of him. If he wants more of the same sort of satisfaction he is welcome to come and have it in a fair and square manner with us—not by taking us unawares in the dark. We will guarantee him fair play, although he is a man three stone heavier and two inches taller than we.

THE COMING TEA SEASON.

THE time is now rapidly approaching when operations: will commence for the Tea season 1888-9, many buyers: having already left, and others being about to start for-It does not, therefore, seem out of place to offera few remarks which, we hope, may prove of service tothose about to embark on the campaign. The enormousimport of Indian and Ceylon teas during the season, nowdrawing towards its end, estimated at over one hundred million pounds, together with their comparative cheapness, has had a marked influence on the sale of China tea, the transactions throughout being of a most retail character except when forced at auction. It seems probablealso that this state of things will continue unless shipments from China are materially different to what they have been this season. The best authorities anticipate an import from India and Ceylon during 1888-9 at over one. hundred and twenty million pounds—possibly nearer one-hundred and twenty-five millions. With such suppliesfrom these countries, and several millions from Java, &c.z. and placing our requirements for twelve months roughly at two hundred and twenty millions total, it is evident that if China sends us more than a total of all kinds of ninety-five millions, it must result in dull markets, with an absence of healthy competition.

The question for consideration appears to be how the necessary reduction from the present season's total is to bebrought about. We think this can only be done by buyers: in toto refusing to ship the low grades, such as the market has recently been inundated with—rubbish that does the China trade an immense deal of harm, and, from the lowrange of prices at which it is realised, can scarcely be beneficial to anyone concerned. There is another matter that should not be lost sight of-viz., the decrease in the export demand here; this has for some years past kept prices fairly steady for good teas, but from several causes would appear that in future we must expect a continual.

If the Chinese wish to retain even a moderate portion. of this gigantic trade they must cultivate their trees so as to produce leaf with something of the fragrance for which. their growths were noted some thirty years since, and at. prices sufficiently reasonable to compete with those from. India and elsewhere; that they can do this the experience of the past proves. With a little attention to the firing wedo not see why China should not continue to command a. fair share of the trade, for we can scarcely believe that the Chinese have anything to learn from India as to the proparation of the leaf, if they only pay the attention they formerly bestowed on it. The trade have naturally been looking also to the Chinese Government as to what their action will be in the matter of duties. They recently called for reports on the whole question, and it was pointed; out to them from the two great tea centres of Shanghai-and Foochow, that if they desired to maintain their position that they must be content to release their teas on somewhat similar footing to those that prevail amongst. When the tariff was first fixed the their competitors. duty was 5 per cent. ad valorem, which was subsequently put at Tls. 3 per picul, as conducive to less friction. At that date, however, Tls. 3 was the equivalent of 5 percent, whereas through the fall in values it now amounts tobetween 20 and 25 per cent. Chinese like, however, action. is retarded, and may continue to be until the question ismore severely brought home to the Government.

In making the above remarks we are influenced solely by considerations for the benefit of the China trade, inwhich our readers are mainly interested. The position, with India creeping on surely, is not unenviable; we should like to see it better, and two leading factors appear to be to induce the Chinese to manufacture better teas, and for buyers to refrain from shipping stuff which only fetchess 3 d. on this market.—London and China Telegraph.

In honour of his investiture with the Insignia of the Mo-Eminent Order of the Indian Empire on the 2nd March, t Maharajah of Rutlam remitted revenue amounting to-Rs. 50,000, for the benefit of his ryots, to mark his sense of the gratification he felt at the honour bestowed upon him.

Miscellaneous.

WHAT TO DO WITH NATIVE CONTINGENTS.

The Muslim Herald says:—The armed rabble—for they cannot, with any regard for precision of description, be called anything else—in the service of the Native Feudatories, total, all told, something like 300,000 men. As at present organised and equipped, they cannot be of the remotest use, but may possibly constitute a great peril, in an emergency, such as trouble up North. If after securing to these the services of a hundred thousand miscellaneous levies for internal purposes of police and State, the British Government obtained a body of 30,000 men of excellent morale and physique—which, if licked into shape by a drill sergeant, would "go anywhere and do anything"—they should not only have a highly efficient and reliable body of troops, wherewith to feed the first fighting line, in time of war, but work a very desirable change in the status of the Princes in the plan of Imperial defence. And, by assimilating their contingents to British troops, and causing them to share for two years the garrison duties of British cantonments, it will create in them a sentiment of esprit de corps, in which they are sadly wanting now. While losing nothing of their distinctiveness as the forces of their respective chiefs, they would quickly realise that they are the recognised and trusted component parts of the Imperial army, with whose traditions and methods they would soon become familiarised, much to their advantage. While the conviction that they are trusted by Government and assigned a highly honourable, definite, and active share in the defence of the counntry, will serve as a filip to the loyalty and ardour of the Native Princes, their contingents will be brought into closer touch and harmony with the Imperial military system, to which they stand in a rather anomalous relation, at present. The Native contingents will be brought into closer touch and harmony with the Imperial military system, to which they stand in a rather anomalous relation, at present. The Native contingents will be brought into closer touch and harmony w

THE Pioneer writes:—"We should be very glad to be able to endorse the statement from Bombay that the Secretary of State has decided on a fixed ratio for the payment of Uncovenanted Pensions in England being one shilling and eightpence to the rupee. It may be so, but, to prevent disappointment, we are bound to say that nothing of the kind is yet known to the Government of India."

At the annual meeting, on the 18th prox., the Directors of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China will propose to declare a dividend for the half year to 31st December last at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, free of income-tax, and to add £25,000 to reserve, raising that fund to £225,000, and leaving £8,247 to be carried forward.

ALLAHABAD is at last to have a proper water-supply. The Local Government advance a sum of 12 lakhs for the purpose of carrying out the scheme, the interest on which is to be met by a house-tax. The Military Department of the Government of India contribute 2 lakhs to the project in view of its value to the Cantonments. The work will be practically carried out by Government on behalf of the Municipality, the Government assuming responsibility for its success.

WILD elephants, pig, deer, and other animals are said to be plentiful in the jungles on both sides of the Sittang Railway line, beyond Myounglabin, Burma. "A herd of elephants rather astonished a railway man on a trolly a few weeks ago. Fortunately, after looking at it coming along in the fog, they quietly stepped over the wire and made tracks in the jungle."

THE old materials belonging to the Summer Palace of Tippu Sultan at Seringapatam were put up to auction the other day, and realised Rs. 160. The repairs have been completed; half a lakh of rupees were spent in the renovation, which was begun in 1886, in anticipation of the visit of their Excellencies Lord and Lady Dufferin. The Deputy Commissioner of Mysore will take charge of the building.

Mr. Cordery leaves Hyderabad in about a fortnight's time on four months' furlough. Mr. A. P. Howell will officiate as Resident during his absence. Referring to Mr. Howell, the Pioneer says:—"The rescue from impending retirement o one of the ablest and most accomplished members of the Civi Service has been regarded with general satisfaction, more especially by those who are aware that, thirty years ago, he was baulked of one of the secretaryships to the Government of India, when pledged to him by the Viceroy of the moment."

Bombay has been the first to complete its returns regarding the cost of Civil Justice. The Government lose at least 10½ lakhs on court fees. The Pioneer is of opinion that "more elaborate calculation than is usually thought of is required to work out the actual cost of Civil Justice in India, but that the question will be sifted by the time the Budget issues we have good reason to hope."

THE Englishman states that a well-known gentleman residing in Calcutta has offered Rs. 10,000 towards the building or purchase of suitable accommodation for a Lady Dufferin Zenana Hospital for Women and Children, provided the Bengal Branch of the National Association finds Rs. 15,000 for the object.

The quantity of salt of every description cleared during the third quarter of the official year 1887-88 amounted to 2,710,003 maunds, against 2,404,508 maunds in the previous quarter, and 2,583,048 maunds in the corresponding quarter of the previous year; and the net amount of duty levied thereon was Rs. 50,56,522 against Rs. 45,13,822 in the previous quarter, and Rs. 47,95,125 in the corresponding quarter of the previous year.

According to the list (as revised by Government) of Consuls, Vice-Consuls, and Consular Agents in the districts of the Madras Presidency, Mr. C. W. Simson is Consular Agent for the Austro-Hungarian Empire at Cocanda, and at the same town M. Le Faucheur is Consular Agent for France. At Madras, Mr. Albert Gerdes is Consul for Germany; Messrs. W. J. Eales and G. Thummler Consular Agents for Austro-Hungary; Mr. P. Macfayden Consul for Sweeden and Norway; Mr. G. D. Coleman Consul for Spain; Mr. J. R. Hunter Consular Agent for the United States; Monsieurs A. de Guigne and E. Labussiers Vice Consuls for Portugal; Mons. V. J. de Closets Consular Agent for Italy; Messrs. H. de Closets and V. J. de Closets Consular Agents for Perance; Mr. J. Fortune Consul for Belgium; and at Pondicherry and Karikal Colonel Bowness Fischer is Consular Agent for emigration purposes, Great Britain and Ireland.

Lieutenant-Colonel A. R. Savile, in a letter addressed to the Society of Cyclists, says:—One of the most urgent requirements of modern warfare is the provision of a force of mobile infantry which may be used on all occasions when it becomes necessary to augment the fire power of cavalry, or afford the support required by that arm when employed far in front of the main columns of an army. Our military authorities are in this matter giving a lead to all the armies of Europe, and are affording every opportunity to cyclists to show whether they possess the qualifications necessary for the performance of such work. In nearly all Continental armies cyclists have long been employed as messengers and despatch bearers, but we, at one bound, have gone far beyond this, and are now making experiments to ascertain whether cyclists are capable of being employed as a fighting force. From this point of view the Easter manœuvres will be full of interest; for our volunteer cyclists will be actively employed in the first line of attack. I can honestly say that I am unable to recall any other military innovation which has received such cordial, immediate, and uniform support from the authorities at the War Office as has been accorded to military cycling.

On the 27th ult. the Admiralty notified to Vice-Admiral H. D. Grant, C.B., Superintendent of the Devonport Dockyard, their decision relative to the raid made by the Metropolitan Police a few weeks since on the copper-smiths' shop at Keyham, which recently formed the subject of a court of inquiry, over which Professor Elgar, LL.D., Director of Dockyards, presided. Their lordships direct that Mr. Vining, leading man in charge of the shop, who was suspended from the first, is to be reduced to the grade of a workman and transferred to Portsmouth Dockyard. Rogers, the coppersmith, who was the only other man of the thirty-two at first alleged to be implicated actually suspended, is to be allowed to resume work. Another coppersmith, named Holmes, is to be discharged forthwith, and three other employés of the shop are to be suspended for two months, one month, and fourteen days respectively.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

GAZETTEER OF THE BRITISH ISLES.*

It is a truism to assert that a Gazetteer is a work of a nature, that the name is but a slight indication of its contents and value. The information may be meagre and sparse, it may even be incorrect and misleading, and yet the compilation passes muster as a "Gazetteer." In these circumstances it is with no ordinary satisfaction that we invite the attention of our readers to the "Gazetter of the British Isles," recently of our readers to the "Gazetter of the British Isles," recently prepared by Mr. Bartholomew, of geographic fame, and issued by the well known Scotch publishing house, Messrs. Adam and Charles Black. Let the author tell his story in his own words. "It gives full and accurate information from the most recent and trustworthy sources of the chief civil, ecclesiastical, and political divisions, and of all inhabited places of any importance, together with the prominent natural features and objects of interest in the British Isles. It contains the names of all counties, hundreds, baronies, parishes, and townships; all ecclesiastical districts and quoud sacra parishes; all Parliamentary constituencies; all cities and boroughs, and local Government districts, post offices and railway stations, mountains, hills, passes, rivers, lakes, and waterfalls; bays, headlands, islands, shoals, and lighthouses round the coast; and it includes the names of many thousands of villages and hamlets, seats of the nobility and gentry, and of localities of objects of interest to the historian, the tourist, and the antiquary."

Nor is this all. In the appendices is a varied and valuable mass of information relative to temperature, rainfalls, tides, shipping, imports and exports, industries, villages, agriculture, mass of information relative to temperature, rainfalls, tides, shipping, imports and exports, industries, villages, agriculture, population, and Parliamentary representation; and, to crown all, there is a series of maps designed "to illustrate some of the most interesting features of the physical, political, and commercial geography of the country."

What more could the most fastidious critic want or expect?

And if to the long list be added the additional advantage that And it to the long list be added the additional advantage that the type is remarkably clear and distinct, the paper good, and the binding in every way suitable, it may fairly be contended that Mr. Bartholomew's "Gazetteer" is by far and away the best work of its sort which has ever been presented to the public. It is facile princeps amongst the pigmy rivals, which it is pretty sure to lay down in the dust of defeat and annihilation.

THE TRIAL OF THE JUDGMENT.†

On the 11th of November last four men were hanged in Chicago for participation in a dynamite outrage. We have received from America a pamphlet by General M. M. Trumbull, entitled the "Trial of the Judgment," endeavouring to show that the "trial was unfair, the rulings of the Courts illegal, and the sentence unjust." That the reasonings of this brochure are clever and shrewd is not to be denied, though it would be difficult to accept the various dicta which are laid down as "gospel." Who, for instance, would be prepared to concede that "dynamiters" should be allowed to place a certain proportion of their own class on the jury? Yet this is precisely what General Trumbull's argument amounts to. True, he does not call them by the ugly word which we have used, but their sinister designs are veiled under the guise of "Socialism." Surely, it is argued, a Socialist is entitled to select some Socialists on the panel! Admitted, if a Socialist be viewed as a harmless, albeit possibly a silly-minded citizen of the Empire; but, if otherwise, how could such a concession be justified? Would a murderer be tried by a jury of murderers, a thief by a jury of thieves, a deserter by a jury of deserters? The contention is too hopelessly ridiculous.

We are not ourselves too careful to inquire into the technical legality of the trial of these outrage-mongers. Anarchists, dynamiters, Socialists, by whatever name they be called, are enemies of society, and we fail to see why they should be treated with more leniency than is extended to pirates of the ocean or banditti of the land. Laws were made for mankind, not for fiends, and we should gladly see Lynch justice supplant the ordinary tribunals of the realm when On the 11th of November last four men were hanged in mankind, not for fiends, and we should gladly see Lynch justice supplant the ordinary tribunals of the realm when men are caught hot-handed in diabolical warfare against civilisation, and fiends from the infernal regions run riot amidst an inoffensive and unprotected populace.

SIMON DE MONTFORT AND HIS CAUSE.†

This interesting little volume throws considerable light upon the character of the much-canvassed Simon de Montfort, who lived about the thirteenth century. Spite, however, of all the historical accounts here massed together the man remains, and must remain to all time, an enigma of enigmas—an inexplicable riddle. But let this pass; and it is only necessary to add that the present is one of the most interesting of the series of "English History from Contemporary Writers."

In the Army and Navy Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for April Mr. Robert O'Byrne continues his useful compilation of April Mr. Robert O'Byrne continues his useful compilation of naval matters during the present reign, and Colonel King the story of George Washington. Mr. Cochrane Forster might have amplified his paper on the Militia without either tiring his readers or exhausting his subject—a very important one at the present time. The serial tale, "The Old Adam," sustains, no doubt, its interest for those who have read so far, and "The Haunted White House" helps also to lighten the more heavy pabulum of the magazine. "A Ballad of Hythe" is an amusing bit of verse, detailing sorrows which long ago, when a subaltern, we could sympathise with. Kinglake's concluding volume is dismissed by the reviewer of the magazine in rather a novel and perfunctory manner.

The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Alle and Co.) for April opens with a synopsis of the military career of the late Emperor William, from the pen of Sir Randal H. Roberts, who was the special military correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, 1870-71, and who, therefore, writes of the scenes enacted during the war of that time from personal experience. The frontispiece of the magazine contains an excellent portrait of the late Kaiser. Admiral Winnington Ingram concludes his account of his "Three Years in Rio Harbour;" the story of the "Conquest of the Punjab" is continued, the writer very properly calling attention to the brilliant services of Reynell Taylor—services which were left unrewarded by an ungrateful country. In the account of the "Military Station of Dinapore" Dr. Dickinson tells again the ever-thrilling tale of the Defence of Arrah; and Major-General X. gives a readable paper on "Alderney," the illustrations to which are the best in the magazine. The present number contains several valuable papers on military inventions, and others useful and interesting to service readers.

Amidst the many good things contained in the April number of the Century Magazine may be named from "Dan to Beersheba" and "The Round Up," though a very interesting article on "Bird Music" runs them hard in the race for preeminence. The illustrations are unusually good, and there is an immense amount of sound, healthy reading.

The Art Journal for April contains a magnificent engraving of Hvak's well-known picture "Catching a Mermaid." This in itself would serve to stamp the number as fully up to the usual standard of excellence; but, in addition, there is a very admirable illustrated article on "Oxford," by M. Villars, which will recall to many the familiar haunts and scenes of bygone times.

THE Bishop of Bombay has had the good sense and good taste to abstain, in a Pastoral Letter to the Clergy of his Diocese, which he lately issued (and which occupies nearly three closely printed columns in the Bombay papers) from dilating on the subject of the Contagious Diseases Acts which the Bishops recently, in conference at Calcutta, were so ill-rdyised as to touch in the second of their two Resolutions. He said:—"About the Resolutions I need say but little here. Of the two special subjects with which they deal, one does not invite, and the other does not admit of, detailed treatment in a letter such as this." in a letter such as this."

A NATIVE paper says:—"The case of Mr. Larpent is quite enough to take the breath out of the believer in civilisation and education. It is our honest opinion that no Native of India who is fitted by his education to hold such a responsible post as that of Registrar of a University, would be guilty of such mean conduct as is charged on Mr. Larpent. And the meanness of the crime is equalled only by its daring. Very likely Mr. Larpent had thought that those whom he should fail to pass would not have the courage to ask their moneys back. But in this he must have counted without his hosts."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

CALCUTTA AND BOMBAY-A CONTRAST.

Under the above heading the Times of India has devoted about two columns of its space to discussing the respective claims of the two cities named to be the first in India—as regards all that tends materially or morally to make a perfect capital. It need not be told that the Western journalist gives the palm to the Western city. "Comparisons," Mrs. Malaprop declared, "are odorous," and this description applies to both Calcutta and Bombay, only the writer declares that Calcutta "surpasses even Bombay in its foul odours." If it does it does a great deal, for Bombay can at times remind the traveller through its streets of what Coleridge wrote of Cologne:—

"I counted two-and-seventy stenches, All well defined, and several stinks."

Calcutta is bad enough in this respect, although it savours a little of exaggeration surely to say that "the present condition of its streets would disgrace an African village." Calcutta has for some years been in the enjoyment of the coveted blessings of representative municipal government, where the Babú rules and sanitates; but we are informed that "the Calcutta Municipality is an institution which no citizen, however proud he may be of the City of Palaces, ever thinks of defending. An inordinate love of talking has been its ruin." This is hard upon, but it must be confessed very like, Babú. But the writer, although he uses the term, will not allow that Calcutta is a city of palaces. "The city of Stucco would be a much more appropriate name for the capital of Bengal. The magnificent river, the noble expanse of the maidan, fringed in the background by lofty buildings, is a very grand and impressive sight. But the lofty buildings will not bear inspection. They are built of brick, painted with a somewhat depressing colour." Under this depressing effect it is not surprising to learn that the Calcutta Cathedral is "the most hideous place of Christian worship in the world." But the writer charitably allows that Bombay possessed the next "most hideous." The Calcutta High Court has this advantage over the Bombay High Court—that barristers can be heard in it, and the judges can be seen. But the "picturesqueness" is considerably marred by all Native barristers being compelled to wear European clothes. "This,' the writer gravely asserts, "is a striking example of how far behind Bombay Calcutta is in the matter of political and race toleration." Risum teneatis amici?

The further shortcomings of Calcutta are manifold. In the capital of Bengal there is not that "friendly intercourse" between Natives and Europeans as is said to "happily "exist in Bombay. Perhaps not; but then there is a little difference between the manners and characteristics of a Bengali Babú and those of a Parsi gentleman. Besides, there are social prejudices in the way of even the most advanced and enlightened Hindu or Mahommedan. gentleman which render the friendly intercourse with Europeans a greater difficulty in Calcutta than in Bombay. But, according to this critic, not only are-Englishmen in Calcutta careless of cultivating thegood-will of the Natives; they are equally careless regarding their City of Palaces itself. "There does not exist, as in Bombay, the common bonds of pride in the city and desire to increase its moraland material development." There is also wanting in. Calcutta "the breadth and liberality which gives the toneto social and official life." This accusation if it wentwithout explanation would be of the nature of the things. which are difficult to understand, but the writer explains :: -"The breath and liberality of this tone can be gauged by the fact that from the United Service Club leadingbarristers and leading merchants are rigorously excluded." Alas! so they are from the United Service Club, Pallmall, even if they belong to the Volunteers. The very name of the Club surely would be a sufficient explanation to every sane being but the writer in the Times of India.

Calcutta, however, has sins of omission as well as of commission to answer for. It possesses no Yacht Club. Neither does Simla, and yachting at the Waterfalls therewould just be as sensible a pastime as yachting on the Hooghly. But Calcutta is allowed to possess "othercivilising institutions," which may go some way in compensation for its want of a Yacht Club. It supports an Economic Museum and Botanical Zoological Gardens.. Bombay has its Victoria Gardens, in which a few wild animals are kept, but "the unhealthy condition of the beasts is a disgrace to the Municipality." But "there is noreason why Bombay should not in course of time have-Zoological Gardens equal to those in Calcutta." Certainly not; no one will grudge it such a luxury when. Government or the Municipality (as suggested by thewriter) provides it.

Lastly, but not least of all, the climate of the two cities is contrasted. It is granted that for three or four monthsin the year Calcutta enjoys what Bombay does not possess, a bracing climate. "But," curps the critic, "it is an open question whether it is better to be frozen for fourmonths and roasted for eight, or to enjoy all the yearround 'the languid air which swoons around the coast.'" The frozen inconvenience referred to must be accepted as somewhat imaginary by those who have enjoyed a winterin Calcutta, but the languid air which "swoons" itself or threatens to make those it reaches do so, is always a fact at Bombay. To live in a perpetual vapour bath may become a pleasure in time, but it is somewhat trying at first. It is foolish, however, to praise or abuse either climate; there is something to be said in favour of, and much to be added against, them both. What cannot becured should be endured should be the sensible maxim. followed by all those who have to dwell and labour in-Eastern cities.

And that Bombay is a city of which its inhabitants have a right to be proud, nobody who has seen it will deny. We agree with the writer of its praises that nature has made it one of the most beautiful spots in the East, and that man has done much to improve it; and we agree with him also that "much more remains to be done." But Calcutta has its claims to recognition also-if Bombay will only be modest enough to let other people think so. But that is just the quality which is sometimes lacking in the Western Paradise. We allow that the island city has much to be proud of, and a right, within certain limits, to be boastful. Bombay Ducks have a recognised merit, but why try to make them out to be Swans?

QUETTA is congratulating itself on the acquisition of several "elegant and comfortable" barouches which have been taken over there from Karachi.

over there from Karachi.

The Public Service Commission says that attention has lately been called by the Secretary of State to the term "Uncovenanted." Now the Public Service Commission states that the term "Covenanted" is under present circumstances inaccurate and misleading. It consequently recommends that the service be styled in future "Imperial Civil Service of India" in contradiction to "Provincial Civil Service," new names marking a difference arising from the field of recruitment of the two services respectively. The term "Provincial Civil Service," it is thought, does away with invisious distinctions. It is further urged that members of the two services should be put as far as possible on a footing of social equality. In accordance with the scheme there is to be a third service In accordance with the scheme there is to be a third service "Subordinate Civil Service," comprising the lower administrative appointments.

THE GAEKWAR'S PENANCE.—A correspondent of the Bombay Gazette writes from Baroda:—"The ceremony of the purification of H.H. the Gaekwar, his Maharani, and the subjects who accompanied him to Europe has been duly solemnized. Hindus who drink the waters of the Thames are considered polluted just as those who drink the waters of the Ganges are supposed to become pure as crystal. A few years ago the visit to Europe of a Hindu rendered him wholly incapable of resuming his position in the caste, notwithstanding the fact that he might have lived strictly as a Hindu. THE INDIAN PUBLIC SERVICE—REPORT OF THE COMMISSION.

CALCUTTA, MARCH 7.

The report of the Commission appointed to inquire into the present condition of the Public Service in India is a voluminous affair, covering close upon 650 pages. That the inquiry has been thorough may be gathered from the fact that the total number of witnesses examined in different parts of India.

was four hundred and sixty-nine.

Before proceeding to state its recommendation the Commission gives an account of the circumstances which led to the establishment of the Covenanted branch of the service. It affirms the principle laid down in the time of the East India. Company that no native of India or natural born subject is to be debarred by consideration of colour or religion from entering the Public Service, and it admits both the expediency and the invidiousness of establishing a bar founded on race disqualification. The only just criterion is that of fitness as ascertained by full and adequate tests; where this is impossible, by impartial election. The evidence being light in a marked degree the fact that the knowledge that men of their own race and creed are freely associated with Englishmen in the government of the country minimise the sense of subjection on the part of the natives, and this, says the report, is a sentiment which it is of the greatest importance to inspire and confirm.

Regarding the manner in which the Covenanted Service should be recruited, the Commission is unanimously of opinion that the competitive system should be upheld; and as the Covenanted Service may be said to represent the only permanent English official element in India, the Commission points out that the importance of recruiting that service with reference to the maintenance of English principles and methods of administration cannot be over-rated.

The Commission is agreed as to the inexpediency of holding an examination for the Covenanted Service in India and England simultaneously, and explains that one of the principal objects of Government in recruiting for that service in England was to secure an administration conducted, so far as possible, on principles and by methods in harmony with modern civilisation. It having been always understood that the examination for the Indian service should bear a distinctively English character, it is but natural that the examination should be held in England. as being the centre of the educational system on which it is based. The Commission admits the justness of the objections raised by some of the witnesses that the emoluments of the officers of the Covenanted Service entailed a charge on the revenues of India, and it is said that by limiting the recruitment in England to such strength only as is required to fill the highest posts and deaden the upper ranks of the service an opportunity of advancement to please of trust and service an opportunity of advancement to places of trust and responsibility is afforded to those whose scruples debar them from appearing at competitive examinations in England, while trom appearing at competitive examinations in England, while the expenditure incurred in recruiting Indian talent at rates necessary to attract qualified English Agency is avoided. The Commission recommends that the limit of age should be raised in the case of Native candidates for the Covenanted Service from nineteen to twenty-three, which was the limit originally fixed. Admitting the truth of the assertion that the longer and more complete the English training of the longer and more complete the English training of the candidates, the greater will be their grasp of economical and political principles of administration, the Commission strongly recommends that the minimum and maximum limit of age for Native candidates at open competitive examinations held in England should be nineteen and twenty-three years England should respectively.

The report deals at some length with the manner in which the examinations are held in England. The Commission declines to recommend that the vernacular languages of India, including Persian, should be added to the subjects in which candidates are to be examined on the ground that the examination is intended to be a test of education of the English, and not of the Oriental type. Sanskrit and Arabic, however, stand on a different footing, and the Commissioner has no objection to the number of marks allotted for those languages being increased, provided that at the same time the examination be made of a more searching character.

With a view to provide for the more extensive employment by Natives hitherto reserved for Covenanted servants, the Commission recommends that the following should be excluded from the list of reserved appointments:—Under-Secretaries to the several Governments in India; one-third of the appointments of District, Civil, and Sessions Judges or the chief judicial officers of districts; in the Punjab one-third of these officers after deducting one-fourth reserved for military officers; one-third of the appointments of Joint Assistant Judges in the Romboy Presidency; one touth of Magistrata ships make Bombay Presidency; one-tenth of Magistrates, chief magisterial officers of districts (including Deputy Commissioners); and in the Punjab and Assam; one-tenth of the officers aforeaid, after deducting proportion (one-fourth) reserved for military officers; one-sixth of Joint Magistrates in all provinces; one member of the Board of Revenue in Madras, in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, in the North-Western Provinces; one of the Financial Commissioners in the Punjab, one, where there are more than one, of the Secretaries of the Board of Revenue, or Commissioners who constitute the Board of Revenue, in Madras, in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, and in the North-Western Provinces; one Secretary to the Financial Commissioner of the Punjab; one of the Chief Revenue Officers of divisions in all the provinces except Bombay and Account on the other than the Collecture of Revenue Officers of Chief and Assam; one-tenth of the Collectors of Revenue or Chief Revenue Officers of districts in the Punjab; and in Assam one-tenth of the officers aforesaid after deducting the pro-portion (one-fourth) reserved for military officers; one-sixth of the Deputy or Subordinate Collectors where they are combined with the office of Joint Magistrate in all the provinces; one-sixth of Assistant Collectors or Assistant Commissioners in the Punjab; and in Assam one-sixth of the officers aforesaid, after deducting the proportion (one-fourth) reserved for military officers.

The Commission considers that the time has arrived for taking a step forward in the direction of appointing to judge-ships of the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay, and Madras a large proportion of persons who have held judicial offices, or who are advocates or pleaders.

The Commission recommend that the recruitment for the Education Department should be made in England only for the Principalship of Colleges and the Professorships in those branches of knowledge in which the European standard of advancement has not been attained as yet in India, and that for a smaller number of Inspectorships than at present. The advancement has not been attained as yet in India, and that for a smaller number of Inspectorships than at present. The recruitment for Professors should be ordinarily of specialists for a term of years with power of reappointment.

In regard to the Forest Department that also should be divided into Imperial and Provincial branches; the former being recruited in England, the latter in India.

The present rule disqualifying married men from presenting themselves for examination in England should be modified, as it might operate to debar Native candidates from competing for appointments in England as it might operate to debar Native candidates from competing for appointments in England.

The Government should keep in view the policy of training in India men qualified to take charge of the higher administrative appointments so as to avoid the necessity for expanding the Imperial branch of the service. The experiment of appointing Natives by selection in the Opium Department be discontinued, and that in future the recruitment in this department should be subject to the general principle of the equality of treatment of all classes of Her Majesty's subjects tested by the preliminary qualifications tested by the preliminary qualifications.

Although for many years to come the European element in the higher ranks of the Police Department must predominate, the Natives of India ought not to be entirely excluded from those ranks, but endeavours should be made to introduce a reasonable proportion of Native officers, due regard being always had for efficiency in the service. The present system of recruitment of Assistant Superintendents is unsatisfactory, as not affording sufficient guarantee for educational qualifications and for habits of industry.

No sufficient reasons exist to justify a recommendation that the State should establish a special school for the instruction of persons born and bred in India who desire to adopt a sea-faring life.

Imperial branch of the Public Works Department should consist of such a number of Royal Engineers as may be required as a reserve for military purposes. The recruitment for Provincial branches should be made by direct appointments to the lowest grades from the Indian Engineering Colleges and upper subordinate grades.

The Commission further recommend that the orders of the Secretary of State passed in 1879 which forbid the appointment without previous sanction of persons other than Natives of India to offices carrying salaries of Rs. 200 a month in certain departments of the Uncovenanted Service be cancelled. tain departments of the Uncovenanted Service be cancelled. When considered necessary to recruit with Europeans for Provincial service otherwise than under published rules recruitment should be made in Europe. That as the posts of chief administrative officers of districts and judges involve responsible duties the principle of selection should be more completely adopted in regard to those appointments. When in order of seniority officers become eligible for appointments to Judges or Collectors there should be no hesitation in passing over parsons who are not fit for such office. over persons who are not fit for such office.

In the Postal Department to enable Natives to compete on equal terms with Europeans and Eurasians for appointments which require higher educational qualifications and greater physical energy than necessary for service in lower posts certain number of appointments be filled by competition.

In the Accounts Department the Office of Comptroller and Auditor-General be included in schedule 24 and 25 Victoria, and the Offices of Accountant-General, Civil Auditor, and Sub-Treasurer be removed from the schedule.

In the Customs Department the Commissionership of Customs, Salt and Opium in the Bombay Presidency should continue to be included in the schedule. Of the three Collectorships of Custom in Madras, Bombay, and Calcutta, the two latter should be held ordinarily by members of the Imperial service.

In the Salt Department the Commissionership of Northern India and the Commissionerships of Bombay and Madras be retained in the schedule.

In the Survey Department posts now held by the junior division should be amalgamated with some posts surrendered by the senior divisions.

In the Telegraph Department for the present recruitment in England on the scale now sanctioned should be maintained. In the Postal Department certain number of appointments be filled on equal competition by Europeans, Eurasians, and Natives

DISCONTINUANCE OF INDIAN NOTES AND QUERIES.

Captain Richard C. Temple, B.S.C., son and heir of Sir Richard Temple, G.C.S.I., &c., has been obliged—after many efforts to prevent such a catastrophe—to discontinue issuing Indian Notes and Queries (which has reached four volumes) simply because he can no longer find the time necessary for putting together the notes that have been sent him by mony simply because he can no longer and the time necessary for putting together the notes that have been sent him by many contributors. His time is fully occupied by the work of organisation in Mandalay, and he sees no hope of any relaxation in the pressure of business.

"I have hoped against hope that when such and such a matter was settled the longer-for opportunity for going on with my labour of love would arise, but I now recognise the fact that as soon as one long and absorbing question is settled fact that as soon as one long and absorbing question is settled another arises. The end to this state of affairs is clearly as yet as far off. I have also been unable to procure a coadjutor yet as far off. I have also been unable to procure a coadjutor in the good work. All to whom I have applied plead want of leisure. It is with all the greater regret that I have decided to cease publishing Indian Notes and Queries because as time went on the circle of my contributors continually widened, and I may say of my subscribers also; so that at the moment of extinction my paper had more matter on hand and a more valuable subscription list than any time during its existence. I have the consolation, at any rate, that it is not through inanition that my paper has perished. I have now in MS. awaiting publication matter enough to fill an entire annual volume of my paper? Subscriptions for the current year paid in advance have already been returned, and I shall be happy to return contributions if asked. Some of the more related to the contributions of the more already to the contribution of the more shall be the contributions of the more shall be the contributions of the more shall be the contribution of the contrib nappy to return contributions it asked. Some of the more valuable of these last I have already transferred to my other periodical, the Indian Antiquary, and of those left with me I will select from time to time such as are suited to its pages. I hardly dare to hope that my appointment to this new field of Upper Burma will in the end repay me for the sacrifice of what had become the pleasure of my life, was supported by a many friends, and was su hiddly maken of all over the so many friends, and was so kindly spoken of all over the world by Orientalists. Perhaps I rode my hobby too hard, and it was good for me to tumble off! Who knows?"

CAPTAIN HAYES ON HORSES IN CEYLON.

Captain M. H. Hayes has written an article to the Times of eylon on "Horses in Ceylon." With reference to the com-Ceylon on plaint that it is impossible to get a good horse at a reasonable

"I had a long talk the other day on this subject with Capt. Christopher, the A.D.C., who knows both India and Ceylon, and who entirely agreed with me that it was out of the question to expect to get for less than Rs. 800 a nice well-bred Waler hack, good looking, fit to carry a 14-stone man, sound, young, and with good manners. On after thoughts I am inclined to advance the amount to the round sum of Rs. 1,000, for we must advance the amount to the round sum of Rs. 1,000, for we must remember that an ordinary individual, buying one or two horses retail, cannot expect toget them as cheap as a wholesale purchaser, like Government. I think Ceylon owners have no reason to be dissatisfied with the horses they got for the money; as, taking them all through, the animals are of a very fair class, especially those of the smaller kind, as 'Tommy' (of Kelani Valley fame), 'Pirate,' 'Laddie,' 'Paradox,' and that rare nice-shaped pony, 'Devil to Pay.' . . . I was surprised to see during my stay here so many good ones of the Lilliput order. I trust that the practical instruction I have given to my hundred and odd pupils in Ceylon will bear fruit in improving the mouths and manners of the horses in the island, for a the mouths and manners of the horses in the island, for a change of the sort is much needed. I can't speak too favourably of the good condition of the coach horses—those of Mr. Pate between Colombo and Avisawolla, and those of Mr. White between Nanuoya and Badulla—behind which I travelled at different times." . . . "When people tell me that they give their horses 16, 18, and even 20 measures of bruised corn I simply gape, knowing as I do that the ordinary mixed food weighs per measure over 111b.! Supposing that the ration consists of 1 of gram to 3 (4 would be better) of paddy, or 1 of gram, 2 of paddy, and 1 or 2 of oats, I can authoritatively say that the maximum amount of such corn should be 18lb. for a Waler horse of any size, doing the hardest noscible work whether on the read on on the read. hardest possible work, whether on the road or on the race-course. I think I had better now stop for the present, as I may have possibly started a subject of discussion, on which some of my readers may wish to have their say."

THE MOVEMENTS OF MEMBERS OF GOVERNMENT.

The movements of the various members of Government at The movements of the various members of Government at the end of the Calcutta Session are now pretty well settled. The Viceroy, as we know, goes on a few days' shooting trip to Rewah; thence to Lucknow and onwards to Kashmir; the month of May will have set in with its heat and glare before he reaches Viceregal Lodge. The Commander-in-Chief will by March 24th have reached Lahore, and he will continue his tour in the Punjab until April 17th, when he will leave Dariwal for Single agriculture there are the clear Concept Cheeney will for Simla, arriving there on the 21st. General Chesney will not lose much time in reaching the Hills, though he may stay a few days in Cawnpore. Mr. Scoble will leave Calcutta on the 23rd instant and visit Allahabad, Lucknow, and Lahore; and, if time serves, may run up to Peshawur, and even to Beluchistan, wisely holding that every member of Council should have some practical knowledge of the North-West Frontier. Sir Charles, Aitchison, starting on the 24th will go straight to Charles Aitchison, starting on the 24th, will go straight to Simla, carrying on the work of the Home Department as usual until the Executive Council reassembles. Mr. Westland, after until the Executive Council reassembles. Mr. Westland, after issuing his Budget Statement, will take a week's well-earned rest, travelling by easy stages to the rendezvous of office-boxes on the Simla Mall. Sir Charles Elliott, as Public Works Minister, will make an extensive tour. Leaving Calcutta on March 23rd, he will halt for a day at Allahabad, and thence proceed to the Umaria coalfields. On the 28th and 29th he will be at Nagpur, running out by special train along the Bengal-Nagpur Railway as far as Raj Nandgaon. Reaching Hyderabad on April 1st he will visit the Singareni coalfields on the 4th, Guntakal on the 6th, travelling along the new line to Nandyal and back, and finally make for Marmagoa on the 9th, Poona on the 12th, and Bombay on the 13th. His tour from that date has not yet been settled. from that date has not yet been settled.

THERE are now three great public scandals, which are the common talk of the Natives, viz., the Larpent and Macauliffe cases, and the state of affairs in the Native State of Jammu. Of these, for obvious political reasons, the last is the most important, and imperatively calls for the intervention of the paramount British Government, in the interests and for the due protection of the suffering people. The Larpent case being sub judice we have nothing to say in regard to it. But we must refer again to the unpleasant subject of the withdrawn cases against Mr. Macauliffe, because we are not without hope that the Government or the Chief Court may yet be moved by public opinion to take some measures to extricate themby public opinion to take some measures to extricate themselves from the false position in which both are placed. The Chief Court, in the person of Mr. Burney, practically convicted Mr. Macauliffe of perjury and subornation of false evidence.
The Government, relying on an ex parte explanation by Mr.
Macauliffe, practically recorded their opinion that the perjurer—there certainly was one in the case—was Mr. Browne. The —there certainly was one in the case—was Mr. Browne. The case instituted by the latter for defamation against Mr. Macauliffe would have brought that ex parte statement to the bar of judicial investigation; and so far have assisted decision as to whether the Chief Court was right in condemning, or the Government right in acquitting, the Divisional Judge of Sialkot of perjury. At this point the issue was unpleasantly complicated by a charge of quite another kind brought against the same Divisional Judge, which, besides alleging immoral social conduct, clearly insinuate the abuse of official patronage. This case had in itself no connection whatever with the former scandal; but the coincidence of time as well as the fact that mr. Browne and Mr. Macauliffe were concerned in each, united them in public opinion into a single issue. This union has been emphasised by the simultaneous withdrawal of both cases; Government, the Chief Court and the public assisting, as spectators, while successful outside persuasion is used to hush up the whole disgraceful business. This having been hush up the whole disgraceful business. This having been done, the people are expected, we suppose, to dismiss the little incident from their minds; and to turn to the more prolonged interest of the Punjab Bribery scandal, in order to appreciate thoroughly the beauties of our administration. We wonder whether the English Parliament will acquiesce in the provision of this kind of spectacular entertainment and instruction in the art of pure government for those 200 millions of dusky subjects, of whom we hear occasionally.—Civil and Military Gazette.

RUSSIAN COLONISATION IN CENTRAL ASIA.—According to an appendix to the last report of the Russian Department of Agriculture, an abstract of which has been laid before Parliament (Miscellaneous Society No. 25). Pursuant desired in the contract of the Russian Department of the Rus Agriculture, an abstract of which has been laid before Parliament (Miscellaneous Series, No. 85), Russian colonisation in the remoter parts of Central Asia is not very successful. The province of Semirechinsk, on the borders of Chinese Turkestan, is specially referred to. The immigrants from Russia are either Cossacks or peasant settlers; the former are described as a rough, savage race, given to drunkenness and vice, thievish, cowardly, and destructive; while the peasant settlers rarely come direct from Russia, but have originally emigrated to Siberia, whence they have been driven south by the cold and by the extraordinary restlessness of the Little Russian character. They acquire a taste for a nomad life which destroys laborious habits and ruins their usefulness as colonists. Whole communities apparently settled down in comfort will wander away aimlessly for the slightest cause—the vague rumour by a aimlessly for the slightest cause—the vague rumour by a passing soldier that the Government are alloting lands passing soldier that the Government are alloting ianus near Tashkent or Merv, stories of the wealthy region through which the Trans-Caspian railway passes, and the like. The case is mentioned of one well-to-do colonist who abandoned an excellent farm to go wandering south, merely because he had been told that a peculiar kind of weed which gave him trouble ceased to grow beyond a certain limit. The Dungan and Tarantchi immigrants from Chinese territory are growing very numerous, and are Chinese territory are growing very numerous, and are regarded as a serious hindrance to the rapid Russification of the country. They lower the price of agricultural products, and being familiar with the local system of irrigation, become dangerous competitors to the Russian peasants, who are thereby led to abandon their settlements, and wander off in the vain search for some new Eldorado further south. They in the vain search for some new Eldorado further south. They give the towns and villages an Asiatic appearance, but it is hoped that the spread of education will strengthen the Russian element against the growth of the Dungans and Tarantchis, who bring with them "all the seductions of Kitayism (Chineism), beginning with the cultivation of rice and ending with the filth, the shamelessness, the raid, and the opium-smoking of China." The total population of the vast province is only 758,258, 595,000 being Kirghiz, 75,000 Dungans and Tarantchis, and 44,600 Russians, including Cossacks.

COMPRISING PRACTICAL RULES FOR LEARNING THE LANGUAGE, VOCABULARY DIALOGUE, LETTERS, AND IDIOMS, &c., IN ENGLISH AND ARABIC.

Rev. ANTON TIEN, Ph.D., M.R.A.S.,

Hon. Curate of Holy Trinity, Milton-next-Gravesend Medallist of the Roman University de Propaganda Fide: First Class Honour Man in Arabic, Syriac, and Hebrew; and Proxime Accessit in Classics.
Formerly First Class Interpreter to the Allied Forces in ormeny First Class Interpreter to the Antica review in the Crimea; K.C. of the Order of the Medjidle, &c., &c.; Author of the "Levant Interpreter" and the "Egyptian Handbook"; and Reviser of the Arabic Prayer Book, &c., &c.

"Dr Tien's little book will be found a valuable guide to the traveller who wishes not so n uch to talk as to understand what he hears spoken and sees written in common Arabic. In the course of a hundred pages a clever summary is provided of Arabic grammar, which will be found sufficient for all ordinary purposes, and which may easily be made the subject of further instruction from the native teacher."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

"The most useful portion of the book consists of the dialogues, the idiomatic exercises, the vocabulary, and other additions of practical usefulness, such as lists of official titles, of tribal names, and information on the divisions of time, on weights and measures, currency, and commercial, legal, and political terms."—ATHENEUSI.

"The perusal of Dr. Tien's admirable work will be of the greatest value to officers and others under orders for the East."—Mornino Post.

"Will be found very useful by soldiers, officials, students, and merchants desirous of obtaining a certain degree of proficiency in the spoken language, which is becoming in these days of increasing importance."—DAILY News.

"Dr. Tien's Manual can be confidently recommended as the most simple, practical, and trustworthy guide which has yet appeared."—OVERLAND MAIL.

"The rules and explanations are clear, torse, and to the point, and we cordially recommend his book to all who wish to acquire a conversational knowledge of Arabic." TRUBNER'S RECOAD.

"The book is of a handy and convenient size, and both author and publishers have rendered important service in placing it within reach of students."—INDIAN DAILY NEWS.

"The author of the volume before us has done goog service in compiling this Manual, in which the difficulties—and, it must be confessed, they are not a few—in mastering Arabic are reduced to a minimum."—ROAD ARROW.

In 18-cant Gold Cases, £12.

Wanted agents, at home and abroad, to obtain orders for watches and jewellery on our new instalment system, by weekly or monthly payments. Most beneficial to subscribers and agents. Also trustworthy men wanted in every ship, regiment, and battery to act as agents, to enable naval and military men to secure good, reliable watches at a small profit above the actual cost. Naval and military gents when leaving the service, desirous of being appointed district agents or travellers, are invited to apply for the post; but preference will be given to those agents who procure the most orders during their agency in the service. The means of earning a good income were nover before placed so early in the reach of intelligent, energetic naval or military men retiring from the service. Terms and catalogues free.

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which the old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatiz Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Etatesman. October 1886.

October 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India. or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Scn e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout tes career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its wel-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster-

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE CF

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxiousto do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (inBombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indianveople.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian veople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally dooile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette' has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have mide the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of flustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette "freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for atterchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" irrulates largely throughout India and the Calcaine circulates largely throughout India and the Calcaine

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonics. It is surplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the FrenSh, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, APRIL 9, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[By Overland Mail.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 23rd March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 21st March; and from Calcutta to the 20th March.

At the meeting of the Legislative Council at Calcutta on the 16th March Mr. Scoble moved that the report of the Select Committee on the Inventions and Designs Bill be taken into consideration. The Bill was considered and passed. The same speaker also moved for leave to introduce a Bill declaring the imperial standard yard of the United Kingdom to be the legal standard measure in India.

It is notified that the Vice oy will reach Simla, "via Rewah, Lucknow, Murree, Srinuggur, Umballa, and Pinjore" on or about the 9th May. The Viceroy's party consists of the Private and Military Secretaries, Dr. Findlay, Captain Burn, and Lord Binning, Aides-de-Camp, Mr. McFerran, and the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Durand. Major Cooper accompanies the Viceroy as far as Lucknow.

A PUBLIC meeting was held in honour of Lord Dufferin at the Town Hall, Calcutta, on March 22nd. About 500 persons were present at the Town Hall to vote an address against 2,000 who wanted to oppose, but were excluded. Many telegrams from the mofussil towns and associations protesting against the public character of the meeting were addressed to the Sheriff.

SIR HENRY HARRISON has written a long minute on the Calcutta water-supply, proposing a redistribution by means of fair rules that will prevent people taking more than their share. At present, he says, the middle class of people draw five to ten times as much water as they are entitled to, and the poor suffer.

It is stated that the Burraku Iron Works are likely to be taken off the hands of the Government by a private company. At any rate, negotiations of a promising character have been undertaken, and a gentleman has been sent out to India to make inquiries in the interests of the proposed purchasers.

THE Duc d'Orleans is expected to join the Sikkim Field Force, and will thus commence his military education in India with a sight of mountain campaigning. Latest reports, however, say that he is still out shooting in the Terai.

At a largely-attended public meeting of the rural and labouring people of Ahmednagar it was unanimously resolved to memorialise the Government against the enhancement of the salt duty. The meeting was very enthusiastic. The memorial to the Viceroy was adopted after great discussion.

An earthquake is reported to have been felt in the Punjab on the 14th March.

It is proposed to create a Punjab branch of the British Medical Association, with headquarters at Lahore.

On the evening of March 17th Lord Dufferin inspected the Presidency Volunteers of Calcutta, and Lady Dufferin presented the prizes for the shooting during the past year. His Excellency complimented the Volunteers on their appearance and good shooting, and regretted that this would be the last opportunity he would have of doing so. Lady Dufferin accepted after the parade a bracelet offered by the whole body of Volunteers as a souvenir and mark of the high esteem in which she was held by them.

As Cholera is raging in Cashmere, Lord Dufferin, acting on medical advice, has decided to abandon his projected visit.

To perpetuate the name of Mr. Jamsetjee Nusserwanjee Petit, his father and other members of the family have subscribed nearly seven lakhs of rupees for charitable purposes. The deceased's father proposes to establish a Parsee orphanage in Bombay and a Parsee sanitarium at Bandora.

THE Bombay Port Trustees have sanctioned a scheme for the construction of a graving dock, and the engineer has been instructed to prepare detailed estimates.

Time Maharajah of Cashmere has dismissed his Deware Lachmandas.

H.M.S. "BACCHANTE," 4,130 tons, Captain A. W. Moore, has arrived in Bombay with his Excellency the Rear-Admiral Sir Frederick Richards, K.C.B., the Naval Commander-in-Chief, on board. It has already been announced that Sir Frederick's term of office having nearly run out, his Excellency will be relieved by Admiral Sir E. R. Fremantle, who is expected to arrive about the 16th with the new flagship the Boadicea. The Bacchante will remain for service in the Indian Seas after the arrival of the Boadicea, her next destination probably being Aden. It is likely Sir F. Richards will hand over charge of his office to Sir E. R. Fremantle in Bombay.

SURGEON-MAJOR HUTCHISON officiates as Statistical Officer, Government of India Sanitary and Medical Department, during the absence on furlough of Surgeon-Major Wilkie.

COLONEL GATACRE intends going home shortly after the Delhi Railway Conference.

The Committee appointed to consider and report on the long-pending question of the erection of the new municipal buildings at Bombay has resolved to recommend the Corporation to vote filteen lakhs for the purpose. It will be remembered that a proposal to expend seven lakhs on the building of the Municipal Offices was some three years since rejected by a majority of one, Dr. Peterson having asserted that five lakhs would be ample for the buildings and the site. The five lakhs have grown into fifteen, and it is reported that they may become twenty.

Owing to the small number of competitors it has been recommended to abolish the Mayo prizes for art workmanship, and devote the money to scholarships and medals at the Bombay School of Art.

A PARSEE cricket team is shortly proceeding to England. They deny that theirs is a commercial undertaking, as some of the members will stay in England to study, and one member will be placed under the charge of a professional to learn cricket. They are hopeful of winning some of the county matches which they lost on the occasion of their last visit.

THE Madras Diocesan Conference has resolved on the appointment of a permanent Diocesan Council.

THERE is a silver lining to the cloud which has hung over the Ceylon Pearl Fishery. Upwards of Rs. 300,000 have already been secured as the Government share of the oysters already brought ashore, and, as a large patch of oysters about a mile long, said to be some of those swept off the Cheval Paar by the force of the current, has just been discovered, the fishery ought to turn out very remunerative.

Mr. W. T. Church goes to the Saharunpore District to replace Mr. Irvine, who is taking six months' leave. Mr. Grierson Jackson officiates for Mr. Church as Magistrate and Collector of Fatehpur.

It is understood that Mr. H. C. Conybeare will officiate as Magistrate and Collector of Allahabad for Mr. F. W. Porter, who takes six months' leave from the beginning of May.

Mr. J. S. Mackintosh, Collector of Jaunpur, goes to Moradabad when Mr. J. H. Fisher takes leave home from that district. Mr. M. L. Ferrar, on return from furlough, probably succeeds Mr. Mackintosh at Jaunpur, and Mr. T. H. Twigg, another returning civilian, goes to Azimgarh.

THE Victoria terminal buildings at Bombay were finally completed on the 19th March, when the statue of the Queen-Empress was uncovered. There was no demonstration of any kind. The building is the finest of its kind, probably, in the whole of India. It is adorned with medallions of Lords Dufferin, Reay, and Dalhousie, Sir Bartle Frere, Mountstuart Elphinstone, the second Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, Colonel Holland (Chairman of the Company), and Mr. Watt, the Managing Director.

It is reported that Sir Lepel Griffin, although taking furlough, does not intend to retire from the Indian Civil Service, as was at one time rumoured.

Malabar on the 21st March. One Lady Superintendent and five Nursing Sisters are for duty at the Military Station Hospital at Rawal Pindi, and one Lady Superintendent and three Nursing Sisters for Bangalore. The pay of the Lady Superintendent is Rs. 400 per mensom, and of the Nursing Sisters Rs. 175 per mensem. The Ladies are chiefly from St. Bartholomew's and Guy's Hospitals, London.

It is officially announced that on and after the 1st April a further extension of the Sind-Pishin Railway will be opened for passenger and general traffic. The section in question, which will be worked by the North-Western Railway, leaves the Hurnai Line at the Bostan Junction, and, passing through Sirinan and Gulistun Karaz, terminates at Killa Abdulla, a point near the Afghan frontier on the road to Kandahar.

SHORTLY after the news of the death of the Emperor William was received in Calcutta, his Excellency Lord Dufferin despatched an A.D.C. to the German Consul-General's residence, who conveyed to him his Excellency's deepest regret at the sad news which had been received regarding the late Emperor William.

THE Meteorologists of the Government of India have just made a new departure towards rendering their lore of some practical benefit. Hitherto accounts of cyclones have not been published until one or two years after their occurrence; but arrangements are now being made for the publication of a regular series of cyclone reports, so as to admit of their issue from two to three months from the date of the storms to which they refer.

THE latest accounts issued regarding the foreign trade of British India deal with the eight months, April to November, of last year. Compared with the corresponding period in the year preceding there are variations of greater or less extent in the different Provinces, the most notable being a drop of nearly 115 lakhs in the exports of last year across the North-West frontier, and a rise of over 100 lakhs in the exports to Upper Burma; but on the whole trade appears to have kept fairly steady, the total for imports and exports combined showing a small balance of 30 lakhs in favour of 1887.

THE GOVERNMENT is said to be in communication with the home authorities regarding the proposed concentration of 50,000 troops at Delhi next November. It is not yet known whether the forces of any Native Chiefs will be present.

NOTES.

LOBD DUFFERIN, in spite of the threatened opposition of 2,000 Babús, has left the capital of India, bearing with him the good wishes and genial sympathies of the general community, European and Native—both on his own account and on account of the esteem in which Ludy Dufferin, who has done so much for the women of India, is held.

On his way up-country to Simla, his Excellency will have to undergo the usual penalty of receiving and replying to many valedictory addresses. In response to one presented at Lucknow by the leading inhabitants of Oudh, Lord Dufferin is reported to have said that the "improvement of the North-West frontier defences and the annexation of Burma were forced upon the Government by external conditions over which it had no control. Both were simply measures of home defence, and that never during the past 100 years had a deeper feeling of security prevailed among all classes." This seems to be the general opinion of the Press, both English and vernacular, with the small exception of the normally seditious amongst the latter; and his Lordship's assertion may, therefore, be accepted as correct and satisfactory.

ALLUDING to local self-government his Excellency said that "the system was working in a promising manner." This, however, is a trite remark, which may be open to question in more than one instance. For example, Calcutta has been entrusted to the largest possible extent with self-governing powers, so far as local matters are concerned, and the result seems to be that the city is fast going to the bad in all that concerns health and sanitation. The Babu Municipality is a Loogcracy (to quote Washington Irving), viz., a babbling confederacy Whilst they talk the town suffers.

INDEED, according to the Times correspondent in the City of Palaces, the Native part of the town is almost as dangerous to health as any terai. Sir Mackenzie Wallace, Lord Dufferin's private secretary, is reported to have been smitten with illness owing to having made a recent tour through that unsavoury locality. According to latest reports he has fortunately so far recovered as to be again in attendance on the Viceroy.

But the correspondent writes to day:—"It is hoped that Lord Dufferin's personal experience, fortified by the valuable lecture lately delivered in England by Mr. Justice Cunningham, will morally compel the Government to adopt at once drastic measures for an improved sanitation. The continued neglect of this vitally important question would be nothing less than a grave public scandal."

Cashmere—whose artless Government never boasted of sanitation—appears to be in a bad way too. In its administration intrigue, corruption, and all the ills of bad Government are as rampant as ever. And to make the situation worse, cholera has broken out in the unhappy valley, and this means the loss of many lives, and the certainty of much sickness and distress amongst the unfortunate inhabitants of Srinagar and the adjoining districts. The permanent presence of a British Resident at the Maharaja's Court does not seem to have had the improving effect which was anticipated in many quarters when the appointment was fixed on its present conditions.

SURELY there must be some hidden humour in the following paragraph of the Times correspondent's telegram from India this morning:—

In certain quarters an idea has been prevalent that an attempt has been made to effect the conquest of Burma "on the cheap." This is a complete misconception, so far as the Government of India are concerned. Not only have all the requisitions of the local Government for troops, police, and money been freely granted, but on certain occasions, especially after Lord Dufferin's arrival in Burma, all three have been forced upon the local authorities.

Many people will readily allow that the ilea of the Government of India doing the conquest of Burma "on the cheap " is " a complete misconception.'

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE has, we are glad to see, given notice in the House of Commons that he will ask whether the attention of the Secretary of State for India has been directed to the article in last Friday's Times concerning "The Case of Commissioner Tayler of Patna?" All Anglo-Indians who know the sad story of that case—and who does not?—will anxiously await the official answer.

For a sadder story does not exist in the records of Anglo-Indian history. It has been often told—calmly, eloquently, by Kaye—in burning words of just indignation by Malleson—and in carefully-weighed language by officials daring to speak to facts, but unwilling to offend high official susceptibilities. The Times tells it all over again, forcibly, if dispassionately, pleading hard that justice may at length be done to an injured man, who has suffered wrong at the hands of his country.

Whong? Yes, as the leading journal truthfully says, "A cruel and grievous wrong, thirty-one years after the event, is still unredressed, a great scandal in the treatment of an eminent and deserving public servant remains," and it considers that "the present is a favourable moment to grant the prayer of a man who has for all these years been crying in vain for justice."

But why was this delay in granting even an investiga-tion into the case? Because Sir Frederick Halliday, who caused the wrong, "was until lately, and had been for nearly twenty years, a member of the Council of India, where his presence would naturally render any Secretary of State indisposed to embark on an investigation which might compel a decision that would appear more or less a censure on his conduct in 1857. But Sir Frederick has now retired, full of years and honours, and justice cau at dast be done to Mr. Tayler without any of that friction at the India Council which even the most resolute Secretary of State might seek to avoid."

Could greater condemnation of a system which permits the personal influence of one man to work evil for twenty long years be penned than the above? The Times declines to say anything against Sir Frederick Halliday, or to judge his motives. Why not? What is the use of dealing only with the evil done if the author of it be allowed to pass out of sight uncondemned—nay, "full of honours"? "Measures not men" is a maxim which has been well described as the cant of fools or knaves. A wrong is acknowledged to have been done, yet Secretary after Secretary of State declines even to inquire into it lest the susceptibilities of the man whose animosity wrought the wrong be hurt. And this is English official honour!

WILLIAM TAYLER is now in his eighty-first year, and he has been fighting for thirty long years a great battle against injustice and official apathy, or worse. The world, it is said, likes only successful men; and the victim named, although he has deserved success, has not yet gained it. It may be that, in the words of Jean Paul Richter, it may yet be granted to him to "shake away the snow of time from the winter green of memory," and to behold the past wrong righted and truth and justice prevail. But what a waste to look back upon now, and to look forward to—what? "The sands are fast running in the hour-glass," says the writer who is pleading now for him, "and the time cannot be far distant when this world's justice and injustice will be alike nothing to William Tayler. It will be our loss rather than his if the future historian has to record that he went down to the grave with all who knew his deeds applauding them, and officialism alone holding stupidly, unjustly, and dishonestly aloof." All who love truth and claim justice for themselves must endorse these words. Let it be hoped that even at this late hour they may no t fall on closed official ears. Surely the Gracious Lady whom he served so well in the darkest hour of England's trial in India will bring her gentle influence to bear to rectify the injury done to one of her most faithful sub-

No news of any importance has been received from the Sikkim reconnoitring party. They have seen a number of Tibetans near the Jalep Pass. The Tibetans retired on the approach of the party. Two hundred men of the Pioneers have left Rongli for Shillambi. On their arrival an advance will be made to Gnatong. Colonel Nicholls from Padong

The Viceroy, accompanied by the Maharajah of Rewah, proceeded on Tuesday on a shooting expedition to the Jhilia jungles. The sport was poor, and only two tigers were shot. On Thursday he left Rewah for Lucknow, where he arrived in the afternoon, and was received at the station by the Lieutenant-Governor and the General Commanding the Division and a large on the right of Quida Tallykdors.

A largely-attended meeting of the provincial branch of Lady Dufferin's Fund was held at Lucknow on Wednesday. The Lieutenant-Governor presided. Lady Dufferin was present, as were several Native chiefs and Talukdars. The president, in a long speech, gave a detailed history of the branch during the past two years. An address was delivered on the position of the Agra Medical School with reference to the fund of the Agra Medical School with reference to the fund. Papers were also read on the training of midwives at Lady Lyall's school at Berhampore, and on the status of female medical practitioners and female dispensaries.

The offer of Runbir Jung of Nepaul to mediate for a settlement with Tibet and Sikkim has been courteously declined. Sir Lepel Griffin, the Governor-General's Agent for Central India, recently became the object of a series of gratuitous libels in the Native Press, and requested permission of the Indian Government to prosecute. In a letter refusing this sanction two reasons were stated. First, the Governor-General assured Sir Lepel that the Government attitude respecting the Recum of Rhorel needed no vindication against parties critiassured Sir Lepel that the Government attitude respecting the Begum of Bhopal needed no vindication against partisan criticisms, which completely disregarded the interests of the people of Bhopal. Secondly, the Agent has the satisfaction of knowing that the policy of the Indian Government in Bhopal affairs is chiefly based upon the Agent's advice; that it has succeeded in removing serious grievances, in introducing valuable reforms, and has received the support of the Government and the approval of the Secretary of State. Such attacks can therefore be regarded by the Agent with indifference.

On Wednesday Colgong, the second largest town in the Bhagulpur district, was almost entirely destroyed by fire. It is an important trading centre on the south bank of the Ganges. When the fire burst out a strong wind was blowing, which carried the flames right across the town, and rendered all possibility of stopping the progress of the fire hopeless. A great amount of misery prevails, as the inhabitants are houseless, and have practically lost everything. Fortunately Mr. Beames, Commissioner of the division, is one of the ablest officials in the Civil Service, and will doubtless adopt energetic measures for mitigating as far as possible the disastrous consequences of the fire.

The Pioneer in an able article draws public attention to the The Pioneer in an able article draws public attention to the fact that the Artillery in India is for all practical purposes rendered useless for war in consequence of being equipped with obsolete guns. The force in India, consisting of 11 batteries Horse and 42 Field Artillery, is armed with obsolete nine-pounder muzzle-loaders, which excited the derision of the foreign officers at the Delhi manœuvres. With the exception of mountain batteries armed with screw guns, not a single gun in India, either in Horse, Field, or Siege battery, or mounted on defence works, is equal to the work expected, relatively to the present conditions of European artillery. This, in face of severely heavy home charges, afford a serious ground for complaint, and imperiously demand at ention and ground for complaint, and imperiously demand attention and

RANGOON (viâ Teheran), APRIL 7.

Major-General Sir George White left Rangoon this morning for England on three months' privilege leave. Major-General Sir R. Low has taken the command of the troops in Upper

There can no longer be any doubt that the Chief Commissioner in deciding to disarm Burma has made a lamentable mistake. Mr. Crosthwaite decided on the policy of disarmament in opposition to the recommendation of many of the most experienced civil officers in Burma. Colonel Street, Senior Commissioner in Burma, who has since retired, pointed out in an able minute the unfortunate consequences likely to result if the people were disarmed. In the present condition of the country, Colonel Street and other experienced officers urged, it would be impossible for some time to afford adequate protection to the peasantry, especially to those in the remoter districts, and that disarming the loyal classes would leave them at the mercy of dacoits, who would find no difficulty in proat the mercy of dacoits, who would find no difficulty in pro-curing arms and ammunition. These predictions have unfor-tunately proved only too true. Complaints are pouring in from all sides as to the unfortunate results of disarmament. The last official bulletin on Upper Burma reports murders by dacoits of loyal Thugyees, or village headmen, in Sagaing, Yau, Myingan, and the Lower Chindwin district. In one case the wife and daughter of one of these unfortunate men were massacred at the same time. The Rangoon Times, a journal which has hitherto been a steady supporter of Mr. Crosth-waite's administration, says in its issue of April 3 in reference to disarmament: to disarmament:—
"The worst fears regarding its effects on the local people of all races are being realised, and the end is not yet. already indications that no act of the Government during the war has been more disastrous to the pacification of the country than this, save, perhaps, the disbanding of Thebaw's troops with arms in their hands."

The Rangoon Times, in the same article, after dwelling on the fact that disarmament leaves the loyal classes at the mercy of the disloyal, points out that the dacoits have no difficulty in supplying themselves with arms. It says:—

"Are not guns and ammunition imported all along the line of the Salween and down even to Mergui? The Karennee is said to have abundance of military caps at very low prices, and as for gunpowder, almost everyone knows how to make it. The dacoit has little difficulty in obtaining arms and

It declares that the result of the policy of disarmament, which is alienating the loyal classes, is that the very hope of future successful government in Burma is being quenched. The illjudged action of the local Government in depriving the loyal Karens of their arms without even paying the value of the weapons is universally codemned. In many cases these Karens invested all their savings in the purchase of guns these Karens invested all their savings in the purchase of guns or mortgaged their littleproperties to raise money to procure firearms. They purchased these weapons with the full acquiescence and knowledge of the Government. After conspicuous and unswerving loyalty on the part of the Karens they have been deprived of their guns without compensation and left to face dacoits unarmed and to meet their creditors unassisted.

Much of the disorder now prevailing in Upper Burma is undoubtedly attributable to the distress prevailing there, owing to the want of food. The sharpness of the prevailing owing to the want of food. The sharpness of the prevailing scarcity is indicated by the returns published of exports of rice from the Lower Province to Upper Burma. Between the 1st of January and the 4th of April in the present year the quantity of rice sent to Upper Burma exceeded more than threefold the amount sent during the same period of last year. Increased expenditure on reproductive public works in Upper Burma would do much to accelerate the pacification of the province by affording means of livelihood to many now driven by want to crime. The responsibility of neglecting to make any expenditure required for the restoration of order will rest with the local Government. the local Government.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS

MR. JUSTICE CUNNINGHAM ON SANITATION IN INDIA.

(Statesman.)

Few things have impressed us more in our long acquaintance with this country than the extraordinary changes of opinion on great political questions that commonly come over the minds of men who have finally retired therefrom, after a few months' residence at home. Men who have been utter Torics in India develop into advanced Liberals within a few months of arriving at home. The fact speaks strongly for the influence which "travel" and residence in foreign lands exercise upon receptive minds. Comparing Englishmen in India, as a body, with Englishmen at home whose travels have been confined to the Rhine or the tour of Europe, the Anglo-Indian will, as a rule, be found a broader and more capable man, we believe, than the untravelled Englishman. Anglo-Indian society, as a whole—and this qualification must not be forgotten—live and move upon a higher intellectual plane than the ordinary Englishman at home. Nothing is more striking than the rapidity with which men who have been strongly Conservative in India shake off their fetters when transplanted back to their own soil, the purely adventitious influences of race feeling. own soil, the purely adventitious influences of race feeling having lost their hold upon him. There are few men for whom we have a higher esteem than Lord Hobhouse, who is an advanced Liberal, if not a Radical, in English politics, of an advanced Liberal, if not a Radical, in English politics, of the best and purest type.

There is something in the atmosphere of official life in this country that asphyxiates all wise and broad counsels, and reduces everything to the level of expediency. Lord Hobhouse in England is another man altogether from Sir Arthur Hobhouse of the Indian Council. He is like an imprisoned bird who has found his cage open, and at once soars instinctively to the region which is his native air. Mr. Justice Cunningham is the latest example of this wonderful and Cunningham is the latest example of this wonderful and instant change. Every one remembers—who, indeed, can forget?—the passionate efforts made by him to fasten all responsibility for the present condition of Calcutta upon the new Municipality, to whom the Government had handed over its affairs, with arrears of long neglect to be brought up, for which the Municipality had be recovered and representations. which the Municipality had no resources and no responsibility. It was in vain that we pointed out again and again during the controversy that the Municipality was required to "make bricks without straw." Mr. Cunningham has unconsciously succumbed to the official atmosphere in which he lived, moved, and had his height Havingad self-government with interest. and had his being. He viewed self-government with intense dislike, because the official world did so. We have no doubt that he honestly believed the Statesman to be a most mischievous paper for refusing to admit the justice of holding self-government responsible for a century of official neglect. No sooner, however, does he get into the pure and bracing influence of free institutions than we find him another man altogether, advocating with eloquent earnestness the views with which we ourselves opposed his crusade against the Municipality but two or three years ago. So far are we from blanning Mr. Cunningham for this entire change of front that we sincerely congratulate both him and ourselves upon the powerful advocacy with which he is now presenting our own convictions to the minds of the English people. Mr. Cunningham is now as conspicuously right as he was conspicuously wrong three years ago.

A SILHOUETTE FROM AN INDIAN STABLE. (Madras Mail.)

That is my horsekeeper's eldest child and her mother's right hand. She is of the age of five, and small for her years; black as a British sweep, with a funny quaint little face, redeemed from ugliness by its gleaming black eyes, and the straight white teeth. She is one of a numerous family, who dwell in the regions of the stable, but she does not spend her time like her elder cousins and comrades in roaming about the com-pound pretending to search for firewood, but really giving their attention to the secretion of unripe fruit. That is very busy at other things. Her industry is not counterfeited, nor her usefulness imaginary. Either she is sitting over the boiling gram, carefully stuffing leaves or dry bits of bark into the triangle of three stones that serves as a fireplace, or she is rocking the baby who hangs suspended in an old cloth from a law branch of the trae outside on the is to be seen poinfully. rocking the baby who hangs suspended in an old cloth from a low branch of the tree outside, or she is to be seen painfully carrying small pots of water for the horses, or sweeping out the stables with a serious application, and the stump of an used-up besom. Whenever thus employed a due sense of responsibility is upon her, and is manifested in every movement. Nor, indeed, is she at all a mean auxiliary to her mother in more difficult matters. When the lord of the household comes home in the evening gross and tired no one can see the comes home in the evening cross and tired, no one can soothe his ruffled feelings and make him comfortable like Thâi.

When, as will sometimes happen, he has paid a visit to the toddy-shop, provided for him by a paternal Government, and returns quarrelsome and inclined to violence, no one can manage him and get him to go quietly to his mat like Thâi. Clinging to one of his fingers, in a high piping voice that is still very childish, she lisps out to him a long story with running accompaniments of long drawn-out "ehs...ahs..." in imitation of her elders, until the good man had forgotten that he had a bone to pick with his wife that evening. Whereby, it may be, Thâi saves her mother from an application of that discipline which English proverbs and Eastern usage alike show is so improving to the sex.

Such is Thâi when on duty. But she is not without her relaxations too. Greatest of these are her small brother, an arrival of some two years' seniority to the baby on the tree, and a pye pup, with the regulation red rag collar, and four inches of string dangling from it. The small brother spends most of his time sitting by a heap of dry river sand, from which he continually measures out imaginary gram. Thâi has a host of resources to enliven his occupation, talking, laughing, clapping her hands, and performing duties which may be meaningless to the stranger, but are full of import to the small brother and the pye pup. The former chuckles with satisfaction, and the latter dances about excitedly. But the stranger who watches these performances must not himself be seen, or they cease instantly. The appearance of a white face at once hushes the merriment, as the apparition of a hawk silences a hedgeful of birds. Thâi gravely rises, endeavouring to draw her rags a little more tidily about her, as when makes her salaam, and coaches her brother in his. The pye pup makes a pretence of attacking the intruder who has spoilt his game, but soon thinks better of it. The other human occupants of the stables become supernaturally silent, and the syces appear inordinately busy. But the cloud soon passes over, the intruder retires, and the children's play recommences, while the syces' sudden industry loses its vigour, and their tongues are let loose again.

Near the gate of the compound there is a cork-tree, from which the sweet-scented white blossoms fall so thickly as to make the path white, and the air redolent. This is Thâi's favourite playground in the evening, and thither she is to be seen struggling to make her way when released from domestic duties. Astride on her small hip she bears her small brother, her too slim body bent nearly double with the effort to make a seat for him, and though he clings vigorously with arms and legs, before she has gone far he begins to slip off. Letting him down gently to the ground, Thâi settles down beside him, and rests, laughing, for a time on the path before beginning the journey again. But when once arrived at the tree they are rewarded for their pains. The small dusky figures will sit for hours contentedly among the sweet white flowers, stringing them on to dried grass, and making necklets and bracelets of them. The pup does not approve of these amusements, and not even the adornment of his collar will change his opinion. In his futile endeavours to attract attention he passes through every state of canine experience, inquisitiveness, mischievourness, sulkiness, repentance, weariness and, finally, sleep. So they remain until the setting sun, or the shrill voice of the mother warns the children to undertake the return journey. And such are the simple pleasures to which Thâi has access, varied by an occasional festival, when her hair receives an extra supply of oil, and she may even have the unwonted taste of sweetmeats. It is not a very luxurious or easy childhood, but it is that to which thousands of others like Thâi are born, and it has its lights and shadows like more ambitious pictures.

THE MHOW AND BELGAUM COMMANDS. (Times of India.)

On Tuesday our London correspondent telegraphed to us that, according to the Indian Army Reorganisation scheme, it was decided that the Mhow Division would stand fast. Equal anxiety was felt here as to the fate of the Belgaum command, and we wired to our correspondent for information. His reply has now reached us, and runs as follows:—"No final decision has been arrived at regarding the restoration of Belgaum to Bombay as a First-Class Station Command; but Belgaum will probably be the headquarters of the new Northern District, Madras." In explanation of this second telegram it may be well to explain a few points connected with the new scheme of commands and staff. The Secretary of State declined, we hear on the best authority, to give any opinion or to pass any orders upon the scheme when it was first submitted to him until he knew what the Governments of Madras and Bombay had to say about those proposals that affected the armies of their respective presidencies. The whole scheme was cut and dried and sent home by the Government of India, in the first instance, without consulting the local Governments in any way. This initself was a most unusual proceeding. The new scheme, however, contemplated the Nagpore "District Command" being garrisoned by Bombay troops and handed over to the Bombay Army, and Belgaum remaining with the Madras Army as a first-class station command under the Bellary Division. The Bombay Government objected to this, and proposed that the Nagpore District Command should be left to Madras, and that Belgaum should be given back to the Bombay Army as a First-Class Station Command under the Poona Division—a proposal that would benefit the Madras Army by giving it a District Command to which a staff salary of Rs. 1,400 per month is attached, in place of a First Class Station Command with a staff salary of Rs. 800. The objections to the Bombay Army taking over the Nagpore District are its distance from our Presidency (some of its out-stations are less than half the distance from Calcutta that they are from Bombay); it has no connection of any kind with Bombay; and the strength of the Bombay Army is insufficient to provide the garrison while we have so many troops in the Quetta District and in Burma. The arguments in favour of the restoration of Belgaum are that it is now connected with Poona by rail; that the neighbouring district is the recruiting ground for the Mahratta element in the Bombay Army; and that the civil admininistration still rests with Bombay, Belgaum was transferred from the Bombay to the Madras Army while General Hardinge was in command, but the transfer was only part of a proposal for the redistribution of the Bombay Army by which General Hardinge contemplated concentrating our troops, already far too much scattered and broken up into detachments. The transfer of Belgaum was carried out, but the remainder of the proposal came to nothing. It would have cost money, and that is, it would seem from the hint thrown out in our telegram, quite sufficient to check any reform in these days of impecuniosity.

BURMA. (Rangoon Gazette.)

It is a humiliating result of over thirty years' British rule in Lower Burma that the people from this part of the country should be of so little assistance in the work now going on in the newly annexed province. In his Resolution on the Burma Civil Police the Chief Commissioner says:—"It is quite evident, and it is admitted by nearly all the officers whom the Chief Commissioner has met, that outsiders brought from a distance, and especially Lower Burmans, are useless, if not mischievous, and help to estrange the people from the Government." The remedy Mr. Crosthwaite suggests is to recruit the civil Burman police locally, and, if possible, through men of local influence. Indeed, orders to this effect had been given before, and the most successful civil police are those in Ye-u, where this order was carefully carried out; while the most successful are to be found in Chindwin, where men werebrought from Rangoon and elsewhere in direct contravention of the Chief Commissioner's orders.

brought from Rangoon and elsewhere in direct contravention of the Chief Commissioner's orders.

It is not very difficult to see how Lower Burmans, serving as policemen in Upper Burma, act so as to disparage the British Government in the eyes of its new subjects. To begin with, the class of men who enlist in the police, even for service in Lower Burma, is not a very good one. The better classes of the Burmese do not go into the police as constables. Trade and agriculture afford them a more lucrative and a more independent career. Those who do enlist in the police, it is to be feared, look to the possible illicit gain that career affords, rather than actual pay and the prospects of promotion. But in Lower Burma, and more especially in the towns, the people have learned, very imperfectly it is true, but still they have learned, to some extent to resist the illegal exactions of the police. If the ordinary police constable discovers an illicit still or a gambling house, he may make an occasional haul by accepting bribes not to report the matter; but as a rule he is obliged to confine his exactions to altogether petty sums realised from the owners of stray goats, or from people caught bathing at the hydrants. These cannot yield a very large average income to the police generally; though certain beats may be very lucrative in this way. But beyond these, the ordinary constable in Lower Burma has no perennial source of income outside his pay. He dare not attempt extortion without some plausible pretext of an act of some kind having been infringed. The people of Lower Burma have some dim understanding of the fact that a policeman's powers are distinctly and strictly limited; and though they may, and no doubt often do, submit to petty extortions rather than incur the risks and undertake the labour of resisting, most of them would probably resist any heavy extortion, especially if they were wholly innocent of any real offence against the law. In Upper Burma, however, the people have just passed out of a condition of things resources. Among a people accustomed to such a state of things as this, the policeman from Lower Burma no doubt finds a most lucrative field of work. He can draw much more largely on his imagination for pretexts of infringed laws among a people who have so little conception of British law as the Upper Burmans, than he would dare to do among Lower Burmans who have acquired some elementary notions on the subject.

THE RAJPUTANA AGENCY. (Bombay Gazette.)

The Administration Report of the Rajputana Political Agency contains many testimonies to the social and political progress of the States under the supervision of the Agency. There are, on the other hand, here and there some noteworthy instances of "survivals" which the Bombay Anthropological Society might take note of and investigate. Thus, in a village belonging to the State of Tonk, a remarkable case of johar, or human sacrifice, occurred some months ago. The village, we are told, consists of about sixteen or seventeen houses, inhabited chiefly by Brahmins, who considered that their lands should be exempt from assessment. The Durbar, however, persisted in their demand, and the villagers proceeded to perform johar by way of protest. Four women consented to immolate themselves, but two only had the courage to carry out their determination. In other directions there are indications of the waning influence of savage customs. The Bihls and Grassias of Jura are reported to have yielded to the persuasion of the British officers, and to have resolved to renounce the cruel practice of witch-swinging. In the Kotra district of Meywar the same tribes have come to a similar resolution, and have given a pledge of their fidelity to it by putting up memorial stones in token thereof. Here is good work which the most merciless critic of British administration in India cannot find fault with. In Jeypore an important endeavour in the direction of social reform has been made on the initiative of the Maharajah, who, with the approval of his chief nobles, has introduced regulations for curtailing expenses on the occasion of marriages and funerals, expenses which, the Resident says, lie at the root of much that is evil in Rajputana, and of which much the same thing may be said in every part of India. The rules are based mainly on the principle of keeping the expenses strictly in proportion to the income of the estate. Apparently the Maharajah believes in the "downward filtration" principle, and trusts to the example of economy among

There are only 50 Haileybury Civilians left in all India now; and, as the last of them came out to India early in 1858, they have all completed their required twenty-five years of service, and can retire when they please. The 50 are distributed over the different provinces as follows:—17 in Lower Bengal, 11 in the North-Western Provinces, 9 in Madras, 7 in Bombay, 3 in the Punjab, and 3 directly under the Government of India. There are no Haileybury Civilians in Burma, the Central Provinces, and Assam. The three under the Government of India are Mr. Hogg (Director-General of Post Offices), Mr. Leslie Saunders (Commissioner of Berar), and Sir Charles Bernard (Resident in Mysore). The Lieutenant-Governors of Bengal, the North-Western Provinces, and the Punjab are all Haileybury men; but the Chief Commissioners of Burma (Mr. C. Crosthwaite), the Central Provinces (Mr. A. Mackenzie), and Assam (Mr. D. Fitzpatrick), and the three Civilian Members of the Supreme Council (Sir C. Aitchison, Sir C. Elliot, and Mr. Westland) are all competition men. Both Members of Council in Bombay are competitioners (Mr. Richey and Mr. West); but both in Madras are Haileyburians (Mr. Master and Mr. Hutchins); so the highest honours are very fairly divided between the two Services. But when we come to a grade lower than the highest, we find that the competitioners monopolise all the Staff appointments, as 29 out of the 50 Haileyburians are in the ordinary line of the Service.

Every Secretary to Government throughout the eight Provinces (Mr. Young, Punjab; Woodburn, Benett and Smeaton, North-Western Provinces; Edgar, Macaulay, and Nolan, Bengal; Stokes, and Price, Madras; Nugent, and Lee-Warner, Bombay; C. J. Lyall, Assam; D. M. Smeaton, Burma; and L. Niell Central Provinces), and throughout the five Departments of the Government of India (Sir E. Buck, Revenue; E. J. Sinkinson, Financial; A. P. McDonnell, Home; H. M. Durand, Foreiga; and S. H. James, Legislative) is a competitioner; and all the minor Secretariat appointments are of course held by competitioners, the Haileybury men being all too senior to fill them. The 50 Haileyburians hold the following appointments: 18 are Commissioners of Divisions; 7 are Magistrates and Collectors; 5 are Members of Boards of Revenue; 5 are Judges of High Courts; 4 are District Judges, and 3 Lieutenant-Governors, while 2 each are Members of Council, Residents and Opium Agents, one is a Director-General of Post Offices, and one a Financial Commissioner. It will thus be seen that they virtually monopolise the Commissionerships in the Regulation Provinces and the Boards of Revenue (out of 7 appointments in the latter, only 2 are held by competitioners, Mr. Quinton in the North-Western Provinces and Mr. Bliss in Madras); but they only hold 5 High and Chief Court Judgeships and Judicial Commissionerships (Brodhurst), North Western Provinces; Prinsep, Tottenham, and Macpherson, Bengal; and Burney, Punjab) against 13 held by competitioners; and 2 (Bernard, Mysore; and Hannyngton, Travancore) out of 7 Political Residentships. The last Haileybury Civilian will be obliged to retire in November, 1893 (Mr. J. H. Rivett-Carnae) on completing 35 years' standing; and the rapid rate at which the numbers of those still remaining are decreasing will be seen from the following figures: There were 418 Haileybury Civilians still in the Civil Service in 1870; 295 in 1875; 167 in 1880; 84 in 1885, and now 50 in 1888. The six senior Civilians in India—of course all Haile

BENGAL.

A NATIVE paper states that the pleaders of the Alipore Bar have resolved not to appear in the Court of the District Judge, Mr. Rampini, as he behaves badly to them. How did Mr. Rampini bring about this resolution? The Allahabad paper understands that Mr. Rampini has been boycotted, because on one or two occasions he has considered it his duty to stop pleaders who were so delighted with the exuberance of their own verbosity that they repeated the same arguments over and over again.

THE explosion which occurred on the 19th March at the Government Gunpowder Factory at Ishapore, near Calcutta, took place about 7 A.M., when starting one of the incorporating mills, in one of the mill rooms. It set fire to the roof of the building, but fortunately no lives were lost, and little or no damage has been done to the machinery. The cause of the explosion is not known, but a board of experienced officers has been appointed to investigate and report upon the matter.

With reference to the late Mr. Cowpar, an announcement of whose death appeared in the Bombay Gazette on March 20, a Calcutta paper says, he was a partner in the firm of Messrs. R. Steel and Co. Mr. Cowpar went home for a short visit in the autumn, but the severe winter must have been too much for him, as news came out of his being very ill shortly after his arrival. Mr. Steel, who had contemplated going home on his partner's return, consequently cancelled his passage, when the news was received that Mr. Cowpar was returning to India in the steamer Pekin. A telegram was received from Aden that Mr. Cowpar was very ill, and a friend left for Bombay to meet him on arrival, with the hope of persuading him to return home at once, only to learn, on the arrival of the steamer, that Mr. Cowpar had died at sea, at midnight, on March 7, shortly after leaving Aden. The deceased was well known and appreciated in commercial circles.

The report of the Bengal Irrigation Commission is ready for submission to Government, and will probably be sent in within the next few days. The report deals very fully with the questions raised, and makes some sweeping suggestions for the reform of the existing system and procedure.

In a note on the Calcutta water supply, Sir Henry Harrison says:—Omitting the houses valued at above Rs. 20,000, the most unfavourably valued house in the town, viz., one valued monthly at Rs. 99'12, will be able in less than four hours or low pressure to get the full supply to which it is entitled, and if it takes water at high pressure in much less than that time.

The maximum draught per minute at high pressure with the existing connections will be reduced from 203,643 gallons to 75,930, or by nearly two-thirds. With every ferrule working 75,930, or by nearly two-thirds. With every ferrule working simultaneously, the draught per hour would be 4,555,800, against an engine-power of 2,604,784 gallons only, and nearly 20 per cent. increase must be allowed for new connection. Still, it may reasonably be expected that with the improvement of the pressure, the habit of keeping taps open will somewhat decline, and if so, there is a fair probability of maintaining the stipulated pressure, if this reduction is carried out. It may be that some houses will still be so disadvantageously situated that their formules according to this scale will not may be that some houses will still be so disadvantageously situated that their ferrules, according to this scale, will not give them the 3,000 gallons per rupee to which they are entitled, and I would therefore add a clause that any house which is so situated that a ferrule, according to the prescribed scale, will not give it the supply to which it is entitled in 1½ hours of high and 5½ hours of low pressure, shall be entitled to ferrule of such size as will give it its supply within this period.

MADRAS.

THE old materials belonging to the Summer Palace of Tippu Sultan at Seringapatam were put up to auction the other day, and realised Rs. 160. The repairs have been completed; half-a-lakh of rupees were spent in the renovation, which was begun in 1886, in anticipation of the visit of their Excellencies Lord and Lady Dufferin. The Deputy Commissioner of Mysore will take charge of the building.

A NATIVE named Vencatasawmy Naidu has died at Bangalore, aged 107. The deceased claimed to have been 18 years old when the siege of Bangalore took place; he resided there then, and used to relate many incidents of that period. He was an old servant of Colonel Clarke, Secretary to Sir Mark Cubbon, and father of the present Commissioner of Coorg.

THE Government has, on the application of the Honorary Secretary of the Nellore Jubilee Committee, so far modified their orders with regard to the construction of the Jubilee Hospital for Women at Nellore as to leave the supervision of its construction in the hands of the Committee, provided the plans and estimates of the building are duly scrutinised by professional agency.

In the early part of last year the Madras Government sanctioned a special reward of Rs. 200 for the destruction of a man-eating tiger which had committed great havoc within the limits of a police-station in Vizagapatam, no fewer than eighteen people having been killed. The Collector now reports that two or more man-eaters have appeared in the same taluk, and struck terror into the villagers, and that twenty-three people have been killed. He recommends the sanction of similar rewards for their destruction. The people are in such a fright that they are afraid to go through the usual paths even in batches of seven or eight, and neglect to watch their fields at night, the result being that the crops are much destroyed by wild animals.

It is noteworthy that most of the female hospital assistants now practising in India have been educated in Madras. To the Madras University belongs the credit of taking up the medical training of women first of all.

THE Madras Government has decided that the new High Court shall be built on the Light House, Esplanade, the position which Government hitherto declined to be allowed to be built over, in consequence of its proximity to the Fort. materials for the building will be collected immediately.

A MONSTER me ting has been held at Mercara protesting against the transfer of Coorg to the Madras Government. A resolution was unanimously passed to memorialise the Government of India and the Secretary of State against any change. The meeting was most enthusiastic.

CAPTAIN F. D. RAIKES, C.I.E., having completed twenty years' service, six of which have been in the Staff Corps, has: een promoted to Major from the date specified, subject to Her Majesty's approval.

LIEUT.-COLONEL H. C. BAGGALLAY has been permitted to resign his commission in the Poona Volunteer Rifle Corps. Major W. H. Propert, C.S., succeeds him in the Command, and Captain H. G. Meakin has been promoted to Major.

IT is probable that Major J. Davidson will officiate as Deputy ecretary in the Military Department for Colonel Toker, when the latter leaves to officiate for Colonel Jarrett on the Board of Examiners. Major Davidson acted in the Military Secretariat a few years ago, and subsequently at Army Headquarters, and made his name in both offices.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

THE final tie in the Native Cavalry Polo Tournament at Sialkot was played off on Saturday afternoon, March 17th, when the 18th beat the 12th by four goals to love. Having now been three times winners, the 18th become permanent possessors of the Challenge Cup, which was presented for competition by the 10th Hussars when the tournament was instituted.

THE Duc d'Orleans' shooting party at the close of the eighth day's shooting had bagged two tigresses, three tiger cubs, and a large number of deer, pig, florican and other game. The Marquise de Morie wounded a tiger on the 11th of March, and the Marquis wounded another, but both escaped. The Duke of Montrose left the camp on the evening of the 12th for Bombay, en route for home. On the 13th the camp moved to Limrah, where the Viceroy bagged a tiger last year, and where good sport is expected.

The Revenue and Agricultural Department of India have issued the following report, dated Calcutta, March 1, 1888, on the prospects of the cotton crop in the Bombay Presidency

The latest reports show the area sown at 4,560,752 acres, or slightly above that of last year, and 10.2 per cent above the average of three years ending 1886-87.

The increase in Gujarat and the Gujarat States is due to Southern Mahratta Country States show decreases by about 74 and 8 per cent. The increase in Gujarat and the Gujarat States is due to favourable rain at sowing time, while the decrease in the Karnatak and in the Southern Mahratta Country States may be traced to three causes, the exceptionally large cotton area of 1886-87, the exigencies of rotation, and somewhat less favourable rain at sowing time. The province of Sind also shows a decrease, which, on account of the smallness of area under cotton in the province, may be ignored.

Excluding that of the Native States, for which arna valuation has not been reported in full, the outturn of cotton for the British districts is estimated at 336,848 bales. Of this Gujarat will contribute 122,730, the Deccan 97,233, and the Karnatak 116,885 bales. In the absence of formulæ details similar estimates cannot be made for the

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

In the article with which the present number of the National Review opens, Mr. Curzon continues his thoughtful remarks on the House of Lords as it is and as it ought to be. His proposals, which were noticed at length in an "Editorial" His proposals, which were noticed at length in an "Editorial" in the Times of the 28th ult., are, firstly, to restrict the hereditary right to sit in the House of Lords. In order to this, he recommends that no eldest son or heir to a peerage, upon succeeding to the dignity, should be entitled to a writ of summons as a Lord of Parliament, unless or until he has qualified by virtue of (1) membership of the House of Commons until the close of the Parliament for which he was elected, (2) tenure of Ministerial office, exclusive of the Royal Household, (3) membership of the Privy Council, (4) public service as Ambassador, Plenipotentiary, Minister, or Governor, (5) service for not less than fifteen years in the Army, Navy, Civil, or Indian Civil, Diplomatic, or Colonial services, (6) appointment as Queen's Counsel or Judge. The spiritual Peers are to be limited, as vacancies occur, to the two Archbishops with ten Bishops. It is calculated that, including these, and six Princes of the Blood Royal, the House of Lords would ultimately be reduced to about 218 persons. Mr. Curzon would reinforce (or dilute) the hereditary element of two hundred by adding fifty life peers, to be nominated by the Crown, as many, to be elected by the House of Commons, and a number, which he does not indicate, to be chosen by the Colonies; the latter to be elected at the beginning of every Parliament.

This plan, which has been elaborated by Mr. Curzon and Mr. at the beginning of every Parliament.

This plan, which has been elaborated by Mr. Curzon and Mr.

This plan, which has been elaborated by Mr. Curzon and Mr. G. C. Brodrick (both eldest sons of Peers), has the advantage of being comparatively self-acting, and the merit of being in some measure founded on the experience of foreign countries, especially of the Herrenhaus, in Austria; of the House of Magnates in Hungary, the Senates of Italy and Spain, and the Landstings of Sweden. Opinions will differ regarding the scheme in its entirety, and concerning its various parts; but the care with which it has been worked out will be generally recognised recognised.

Lord Pembroke contributes his share to the Fair v. Free Trade controversy in an article entitled, "Cripps v. Free Trade," in answer to Mr. Cripps's remarks in the March number of the National Review. The Earl writes avowedly as a Free Trader. But he fails to face the awkward and undersiable fact that a country and especially an insular country. deniable fact that a country, and especially an insular country, the legislation of which tends to make it yearly more, rather than less, dependent on foreign and easily intercepted sources for the food supply of its population, is in a terribly insecure—not to say perilous—position. This, and nothing but this—the ability or the non-ability of the country to provide, in a terribly insecure that the same position is a supply of the country to provide, in a street measure at least for its own food construction, its the ability or the non-ability of the country to provide, in a great measure at least, for its own food consumption; its liability or non-liability to be starved into submission to an enemy by sheer want of supplies—it is which underlies the whole question of (so-called) Free Trade, and with this initial difficulty Lord Pembroke, like other Free Traders, does not deal. He should remember that a starving population represents a void which mere Free Trade statistics, piled high as Pelion on Ossa, will assuredly not fill.

In a sensible paper, Lord Lymington points out the fallacy of supposing that the Unionist party is doomed to extinction by being, ere long, "merged in the reactionary principles of a reactionary party." There is, as he forcibly puts it, "no half-way house between the acceptance or the rejection of Home Rule. "The preservation of the Union is the supreme and the immediate question of the hour." The one thing needful is to to keep Messrs. Gladstone and Parnell, and their Separatist band, in Opposition. As the noble member for South Molton hand, in Opposition. As the noble member for South Molton well says in concluding his article, "What men call themselves matters little, or what Government is in office matters little, as compared with the necessity of excluding from power a party who are ready to leave to local option not only the authority of the Imperial Parliament, but of the Ten Command-

It seems to those who know aught of "India as it is," almost like slaying the slain to refute the absurd accusation that we found India sober, and shall leave it, having made it drunken. The assertion is made either by people who are wholly ignorant of the subject (among whom it is lamentable to have to reckon a man so accomplished in most respects as Dr. Farrar) or by men—like Mr. Samuel Smith—to whom India is only known as a fine country for a holiday ramble: and it has never been better refuted than by Mr. C. T. Buckland's lively article, which forms No. 7 of the present issue, and which anyone, inclined to investigate the matter, may peruse with advantage. The importance of agricultural education, in a practical, as well as in a theoretical, direction, is duly enforced by Professor

Wallace. But surely the learned Professor errs in speaking (p. 194) of the ability to perform field labour as being "worth from 2s. 6d. so 3s. 6d. a day"? In the South of England certainly, and (if we mistake not) in a large part of the Midlands and of the North, two-thirds of the lower sum would be nearer the mark.

Bishop Wordsworth's Paper on "Pindar and Athletics" will interest many readers. It is, indeed, remarkable that the quadriennial recurrence of the athletic games at Olympia gave the Greeks their ordinary computation of time; the "Olympiad" being called by the name of the successful competitor; and that this continued to form the basis of the National Calendar for nearly 1,200 years. (Just so do racing men speak of a racing event as having occurred "in Hermit's" or "in St. Bevys'" year, from the name of the Derby winner of the year.) The comparisons between ancient and modern athletics—not always (as for instance in the value of the prizes —not always (as, for instance, in the value of the prizes offered) to the advantage of the latter—are noticeable, and the translations from Pindar cannot fail to please all who love true poetry.*

We have always regarded Physiognomy as a science real in its broad outlines, but, in the present state of our knowledge, singularly inexact in details. The article which Mr. Arthur Benson devotes to John Caspar Lavater, its founder, shows him to have been introspective to an unusual degree, while at the same time, as might be expected, a remarkably close and accurate observer. Accustomed as he was to infermental from facial characteristics, he seems to have been conscious of utter helplessness when he attempted the converse process; he could not from mental qualities aided by the depths of Teutonic self-consciousness (Selbst-Bewusstsein) construct a face: though it is small wonder if neither he nor his friends were able satisfactorily to construct an imaginary portrait of Our Servicus

Our Saviour.

No man who has within him the tendency to "give and take odds," in whatever form, should omit to read and to take odds," in whatever form, should omit to read and to ponder Mr. R. A. Proctor's masterly Essay on the "Certainties of Chance;" a careful perusal of which may save many a man from entering on a path the tendency of which infallibly is towards irremediable ruin. The Paper, though containing nothing absolutely new to the well-informed, cannot be too widely read.

Mr. Champney's bright article, sparkling with anecdote, on "The Devil in the Middle Ages," is a most pleasant bit of light reading, and merits all commendation.

THE LIFE OF SAMUEL MORLEY.+

Few men in their day held a more unique position than that enjoyed by the late Samuel Morley. Public opinion would naturally have centred in a merchant prince of well-nigh fabulous wealth; his munificence, his charities, his benevolences would—nay, must—have been on everyone's lips, but many a millionaire might have done his "diligence gladly," and scattered his gold in lavish profusion, and yet never come within measurable distance of rivalling the great apostle of Dissent. Why is this? Mr. Hodder's most fascinating volume goes far to explain the reason of the unexampled confidence universally placed in the subject of his memoir, alike as a man and a philauthronist. He was the alike as a man and a philanthropist. He was the very incarnation of uprightness, the very soul of integrity. No base action, no mean deed, ever found favour in the eyes of the "king of Wood-street." Deceit, craft, guile, deception, vices unknown to himself, were ruthlessly and unsparingly condemned in others. True, he made mistakes—errare est humanum. Indeed, on one memorable occasion, as he himself subsequently admitted, he committed a grievous offence against his own conscience; but it was the crime of thoughless care-lessness rather than the offence of deliberate wrong-doing. He grieved for his action, and baneful beyond all compare as has been the result, the world will be generous to the one slip of a lifetime.

Then in the world of piety what a remarkable and peculiar position Samuel Morley filled! The head, facile princeps, of the Nonconformist religion, he was yet in constant and daily intercourse with men of all persuasions and faiths. And this, indeed, was the secret of his influence, that himself a member of a strait and narrow sect of Christians, he had the good serves to rise above triffing preciplings and party isologies. sense to rise above trifling prejudices and petty jealousies. "To worship God in the beauty of holiness" was the one aim and object of his religious life, and he could hold out the hand of fellowship to any and everyone who was treading in εarnest anxiety the narrow path which leadeth to realms of bliss above. Yes, Samuel Morley was a great man. With the world at his feet he navor negative the consequence with weelth at his feet he never assumed an air of arrogance; with wealth beyond the "dreams of avarice" he never paraded his benewelences. Courted, honoured, lauded, petted, he never lost his taste for the pleasures of home, and lived and died a plain, simple-minded, honest philanthropist, a loving and loved citizen of the Empire, who in his day did more to leaven the national character than has fallen, perchance, to the lot of any single individual amongst England's many sons.

We are a little exercised by the Bishop's spelling. In p. 273 we find the name of the victor in the first Olympian given as Corcebus, in p. 252 as Choraebus. We take the former (which, moreover, occurs in Homer) as being undoubtedly the true spelling.

It would not be fitting to close these remarks without a word of commendation in regard to the admirable way in which Mr. Hodder has discharged his task. If, as we hold, a biography should be a reflex of the man, then the present life of Samuel Morley will take high rank in the world of letters, and add lustre to a lustrous and honoured name.

PALESTINE ILLUSTRATED.*

Sir Richard Temple's Easter offering to the world of books comes in the shape of a magnificent volume illustrating a journey which he made through a part of the Holy Land during the months of February and March, 1883. The places visited were Joppa, Ajalon, Jerusalem, Bethlehem-Jordan, Jericho, Bethel, Shiloh, Sheckham, Samaria, Dothan, Esdraelon, Jezreel, Tabor, Nazareth, Cana, Gennesareth, and Tiberias. The illustrations consist of thirty-two chromo-lithographs, being a reproduction of studies made in oil colours on the spot by the author. Palestine has been often devicted in engravings by the author. Palestine has been often depicted in engravings and woodcuts, but Sir Richard holds that colour is necessary and woodcuts, but Sir Richard holds that colour is necessary in order to convey a correct impression of the places described, and he quotes Mr. Ruskin's axiom that a faithful study of colour will always give power over form, though the most intense study of form will give no power over colour. The result of following this truism is given in the very bold and brilliant sketches with which the text is illustrated. Sir Richard Temple's pictures, both in oils and water-colours, were well known to Anglo-Indians in many of the fine art exhibitions in that country as displaying great power and a certain well known to Angio-Indians in many of the fine art exhibitions in that country as displaying great power and a certain amount of audacity in dealing with bright tints—a characteristic not altogether confined to Sir Richard's artistic nature—and the views given in the present volume show the same boldness and brilliancy. The skill of the chromo-lithographer has been fully exercised to depict faithfully the striking principles but of severe the results of the correct the results. has been fully exercised to depict faithfully the striking originals, but of course the very best chromos lack the softness which the artist's brush only can give. But these pictures are charming studies, which will delight the eye of traveller or student. The letterpress is superbly got up, and all that the arts of the typographer and bookbinder could do has been done towards bringing to perfection this attractive work. And praise must be accorded to the artist-author for the modest tone of that letter-press. It is well known that Sir Richard can wield the pen as brilliantly as he does the brush, but in this volume he attempts no fine writing; he neither sermonises nor moralises, and does not attempt to make literary capital in describing the solemn and sacred places he visited. He allows the pictures which he gives to speak for themselves, which they do in silence, with a strange and weird fascination. The author gives merely such simple explanations as he thinks necessary for the full understanding of some of the details in the illustrations, and in this reticence he recognises the truth of the German poet's line, that silence is an art itself.

The book will be welcomed by traveller, scholar, and general

The book will be welcomed by traveller, scholar, and general reader, and will add to the well-earned reputation of Sir Richard Temple as an artist and author.

"Sell's Dictionary of the World's Press" (Sell, 167 and 168, Fleet-street), now in its eighth year of publication, retains the very foremost place it had already secured for itself amongst Press guides, both as regards comprehensiveness and cheapness. Press guides, both as regards comprehensiveness and cheapness. It is a work of reference which no editor, sub-editor, publisher, printer, or advertiser can well do without. The issue for the present year, however, is not a mere compilation of dry details, but contains a quantity of matter of use and interest to the general public. It gives a number of well-written articles on matters connected with journalism, illustrated with portraits of editors and other literary celebrities, reproduced from actual photographs. The newspaper Lists appeared to be compiled with considerable care and attention, so as to be as closely as possible up to date, and this enhances the value of the work to manufacturers and others connected with trade who wish to know where and how it will be best to advertise.

"The Foreign Office List for 1888." "The Colonial Office List for 1888." (Harrison and Sons, Pall-mall.) These lists are very valuable handbooks. The first-named is a record of the names of all who are serving under the Foreign Office in Diplomatic or Consular appointments, with maps indicating the places where they are stationed. A digest of the Parliamentary papers referring to the department between January and September, 1887, is also given—a most useful book of reference in all matters appertaining to Foreign Office appointments. The Colonial Office List is more than a register of ments. The Colonial Office List is more than a register of names, although it includes the names and services of all leading officials serving under the Colonial Department at home or abroad. It is a perfect encyclopædia of information historical, commercial, statistical and political concerning every British Colony, great or small. It gives twenty-eight good maps, an excellent index, and a list of all Parliamentary papers referring to the Colonies. It is a perfect handbook and guide to the Colonies, valuable alike to official, to merchant, banker or trader or trader.

"How to Employ our Discharged Soldiers and Popularise the Army," is the title of a very clever and interesting pamphlet and published by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. Starting on the assumption that the army at present only gets the refuse of the population—those who are moved by the keen and irresistible pangs of hunger—the writer proceeds to point out a means of attracting higher grades in the social scale. Some of the methods savour rather of "Zabardasti," in so far, for instance, as the railroads are to be "forced" to give employment to ex-soldiers. But the pamphlet bears the impress of careful thought, and it is not within the bears the impress of careful thought, and it is not within the range of possibility that none of its proposals should find opponents; but to critics, each and all, we would say "read."

A CINGALESE ROCK FORTRESS.—For the first time for a number of years the Sigiri Rock in Ceylon has been scaled by number of years the Sigiri Rock in Ceylon has been scaled by a European, the feat on this occasion being performed by General Lennox, who commands the troops in the island. It is said, indeed, that only one European, Mr. Creasy, ever succeeded in reaching the summit. The rock is cylindrical in shape, and the bulging sides render the ascent very difficult and dangerous. There are galleries all round, a groove about 4in, deep being cut in the solid rock. This rises spirally, and in it are fixed the foundation bricks which support a platform in it are fixed the foundation bricks, which support a platform about 6ft. broad, with a chunam-coated wall about 9ft. high. The whole structure follows the curves and contours of the solid rock, and is cunningly constructed so as to make the solid rock, and is cunningly constructed so as to make the most of any natural support the formation can afford. In some places the gallery has fallen completely away, but it still exhibits flights of fine marble steps. High up on the rock are several figures of Buddha; but it is a mystery how the artist got there, or how, being there, he was able to carry on his work. The fortifications consist of platforms, one above the other, supported by massive retaining walls, each commanding the other. Owing to the falling away of the gallery the ascent in parts had to be made up a perpendicular face of the cliff, and General Lennox and four Natives were left to do the latter part of the ascent alone. The top they found to be a plateau about an acre in extent, in which were two square tanks with sides 30 yards and 15ft. respectively in length, cut out of the solid rock. A palace is believed to have existed on the summit at one time, although time, weather, and the jungle have solid rock. A palace is believed to have existed on the summit at one time, although time, weather, and the jungle have obliterated all traces of it. During the descent the first comer had to guide the foot of the next into a safe fissure, but all reached the bottom safely after two and a-half hours. It is said that the amount of work expended on the galleries is iecredible, and the writer of the account of the feat doubts if all the machinery of modern times could accomplish the stupendous work that was achieved here in old days by manual labour alone.

THE BENGALEES AS PORTRAYED BY ONE OF THEMSELVES.

ALL Englishmen who have had any experience of the Bengal Presidency know that the Bengalees have a very good opinion of themselves. The "first-class classical" Babú is a product of English education as administered under the auspices of the Government of India, and we have a right, therefore, to claim him as our own. But since his creation his makers have been puzzled what to do with him. It has been, and still is, one of the most searching problems of the British Administration in India. He has been thrust into all manner of offices, but he is still out of place. And he is clamorous accordingly. If all his aspirations could be met there would be little room in India for Englishmen in any civil, military, or other capacity, for the Babú considers himself capable of all things. Perhaps his favourite pursuit is to write articles for the Bengal newspapers, which represent his notions of loyalty and gratitude towards the Paramount Power which endowed him with wisdom and a wealth of political ideas. What that Power now thinks of him it might be invidious to say, but it is perhaps interesting to know what he thinks of himself to-day. The Amrita Bazar Patrika, although published in English, is supposed to fairly represent the views and opinions of Young Bengal. In a late issue of that paper there is a leading article, entitled "The Sources of Bengalees Strength," from which we learn that "a Bengaleo Babú is now regarded as next to the European in influence in Quetta, in Tuticorin, and even in British Burma," but it would appear that, like a prophet, he does not obtain sufficient honour in his own country. Elsewhere he is a marvel of virtues :-

A Bengalee, out of Bengal, as a rule, is an angel. He scarcely drinks, and he tries to lead a pure life. He keenly feels that he is the custodian of his country's prestige. He is hospitable and public-spirited. He is a period a medicine about maker; he is a philanthropiet. He carries a medicine-chest with him, and distributes medicines. He plunges himself into every public movement with his heart and soul, and therefore is compelled to take the lead. He is, out of Bengal, respected for his high morality, learning, and public spirit.

Thus, continues the writer, the Bengalee has greater influence in the Punjab than the Punjabeos themselves.

"The Poonaites are their equal in intellect, but they will readily give way to the Bengalees when it comes to a question of precedence." With regard to Englishmen the boast is recorded that the British Government in India was founded with the help of the Bengalees, who (the writer seems proud of the fact) "gained the confidence of the early British conquerors by their treachery to their Mussulman Sovereign." The honest fellows, however, "never gave heed to the incredible contingency that the few white men whose services they were utilising would in the end become their masters." It was Lord Cornwallis who betrayed the Bengalees, but failed to disturb their right to the foremost position in the land :-

The Bengalees were ostracised from the public service by Lord Cornwallis, in the belief that Anglo-Indians had then sufficiently learnt all about the country to be able to govern it with the subordinate help of the Bengalees. But if the Bengalees were thus ousted from leading positions, they, as a partition of fact continued to lead their worsters. matter of fact, continued to lead their masters.

After this it will not be a matter of surprise to learn that the Bengalee holds the Englishman rather cheap. He is the only Native in India who does not fear him. "The Bengalees were never defeated in a fair fight," and so "have never been made to feel by any palpable incident that they are inferior to their masters." The Panjabees were made to feel so because the competition between them and the English was one of "brute force," whereas "the competition between the Bengalees and the English was only about intellectual and moral forces.' Then follows the modest remark:-" We have no desire to describe how this battle was conducted and how it ended. Suffice it to say that the Pioneer and the Times of London are seeking allies amongst Mussulmans to protect their constituents from the Bengalees."

All this is amusing enough, but the strangest part of the article is its conclusion. It denies that the National Congress is the work of the Bengalees, and declares that if that institution flourishes the leading position which the Bengalee has attained will be lost! A consummation which some may say is devoutly to be wished.

LORD BRASSEY ON THE COALING STATIONS.

In an article on the Coaling Stations, in his Naval Annual, just published by Griffin and Co., Portsmouth, Lord Brassey says, that during a recent cruise, the Sunbeam visited all the stations on the route to the East and Australia, except Hong stations on the route to the East and Australia, except Hong Kong. Trincomalee (he says) has a magnificent harbour, the finest in the East; but, unfortunately, of no value for the purposes of commerce. The surrounding country is a dense and inhospitable jungle. Colombo is more happily situated, and here the trade of Ceylon is carried on with perfect security and convenience. Colombo should have been taken in hand, and its defences completed, before attention was diverted alsowhere. A more ambitious policy has been adouted and elsewhere. A more ambitious policy has been adopted, and new works are in progress, both at Trincomalee and Colombo. No delay need be anticipated in the completion of the works. The Imperial Government have undertaken the armament, and guns will no doubt be provided, probably months, and perhaps years, behind time. For the manning of the works, a mixed force of British Regulars, European Volunteers, and Sikhs or Goorkhas should be organised. Singapore, as the key of the China, Java, and the Indian Seas, is a coaling station of the first class. It is described in the final report of the Commission on Coaling Stations as "not only a port of call, but a great commercial centre. Extensive wharves, with three docks capable of accommodating merchant vessels of the largest No delay need be anticipated in the completion of the works. great commercial centre. Extensive wharves, with three docks capable of accommodating merchant vessels of the largest class, and appliances for effecting the heaviest repairs, have been provided. They are frequently used by Dutch vessels of war, and are, of course, available for ships of the Royal Navy. The average quantity of coal in the port in 1876 was 93,000 tons, when the number of steamers calling yearly was about 1,000; but this number having now risen to 1,700, from 12,000 to 15,000 tons are required each month." In 1881-82 the trade passing through the Straits of Malacca, between Great Britain and the Far East, was estimated at £74,000,000. It is growing and the Far East, was estimated at £74,000,000. It is growing with rapid strides. Since the Russian scare the works necessary for the defence of Singapore have been completed at the expense of the Local Government. The forts are of the most approved plans and of considerable extent. It is disappointing to an Englishman to see in this, as in other instances, that while those preparations for defence, for which Colonial funds are liable, are completed or far advanced, the guns for which the Imperial Government are responsible are not yet delivered. For manning the forts, and to resist an enemy attempting a landing, the Local Government of Singapore have at their dislanding, the Local Government of Singapore have at their dis-posal considerable forces. In addition to a wing of a British Regiment, they have a splendid Battalion of 1,000 Sikh Police, armed and drilled as soldiers. By the care and energy of Sir Frederick Weld and Sir Hugh Low (who is called Sir Hudson Low), a numerous and effective auxiliary force has been or-ganised at Perak, with an efficient Field Artillery. Some hundreds of men can be spared from Perak for the defence of Singapore. The armaments for the forts now completed once provided Singapore may be considered secure against any European force which is likely to be directed against it. The defence has recently been materially strengthened by the stationing of the ironclad Orion in the Straits of Malacca. An enlargement of one of the existing docks is much wanted at Singapore. If the Admiralty would assist, it would be quickly taken in hand.

Lord Brassey, in the face of the naval opinions on the value of Port Hamilton, is in favour of the course that was pursued by the Government in renditing it to its owners.

SOMETHING ABOUT SNAKES.

Mr. C. T. Buckland has some very good snake stories to tell in Longman's Magazine. The writer claims that snakes have never had a worse enemy than he, and he justifies the statement, for which he feels bound in modesty to make some sort of apology, by the fact that he set going in Bengal the plan of paying a reward for every poisonous snake whose dead body should be produced before a district magistrate. His wrath had been kindled against the serpent tribe by boyish associations—one being a sound flogging for bringing home a snake which, fortunately for him, was dead. The flogging was administered to warn him of the danger of playing with serpents, and he has avenged his boyish injury on the whole race. Here is one of Mr. Buckland's anecdotes:—

SMOKING THEM OUT.

When the Duke of Argyll was Secretary of State for India he, as a student of natural history, took a special interest in the question of killing poisonous snakes. And there came to him one day at the India Office the cunning inventor of a machine called an asphyxiator, by which it was easily demonstrated that the snakes could be killed in large numbers in the holes in which they dwell in India. It was not difficult to show to his Grace that when the asphyxiator was applied to a rabbit-hole the rabbit must either bolt or be sufficated. The snake would be treated in the same way as a rabbit. So the snake would be treated in the same way as a rabbit. So the duke ordered some twenty asphyxiators, and sent them out to different parts of India. It happened that I was employed near Calcutta, and the Government of Bengal were pleased to order me to make a trial of the consignment of asphyxiators, which they regarded as so many white elephants. The asphyxiators were unpacked, and the instructions which accompanied them were read. There was a sort of fire-box, in which a pestilently-smelling paper was to be burnt. There was a wheel to be turned, so as to send the smoke from the burning paper through a funnel into a long nozzle, which was to be inserted into the snake's hole. This, it will be seen, required the services of two men, one to keep up the fire and required the services of two men, one to keep up the fire and turn the wheel, and the other to direct and hold the nozzlepipe. It was also requisite that the third man should stand by with a stick, to kill the snake bolting from its hole. We turned out with the apparatus properly manned, lighted the fire to get up smoke, and applied the nozzle to a hole in a bank near the stable, which was supposed to hold a snake. The make was injected and out there bolted a terrified ret. smoke was injected, and out there bolted a terrified rat. man with the stick struck at the rat, and broke the nozzle-pipe. The nan at the nozzle-pipe jumped back against the man who was turning the wheel, and in their fright they both tumbled down. The rat escaped, but if it had been a snake instead of a rat it is very probable that one of the three opera-tors might have been bitten. The men lost confidence in the tors might have been bitten. The men lost confidence in the machine, and declined to work it. It was taken indoors, and put into an ante-room, where the Native night-watchman usually took up his quarters. One cold night the watchman closed the doors of the room, and lit a quantity of the medicated paper to warm himself. In the morning a well-asphyxiated watchman was found, but luckily he was brought round with deluges of cold water. This, however, was the end of the official career of the Duke of Argyll's snake-asphyxiator in Bengal. in Bengal.

FROM Peshawur comes news that a trade has sprung up across the border of that district in women from the British territory; but, according to a correspondent, Government does not yet appear to be aware of this. The name of one of these slave-dealers in British territory is given by him as Bostan.

Mr. Alfred Dent, of Messrs. Dent Bros. and Co., of London, and Messrs. Alfred Dent and Co., of Shanghai, has consented to join the Board of Directors of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China and the shareholders will be invited to confirm his election as soon as the Deed of Settlement permits. Mr. William Christian and Mr. John Howard Gwyther, who now retire by rotation, present themselves for re-election, and the Auditors, Mr. William Vanner and Mr. Maurice Nelson Girdlestone, again tender their services. Maurice Nelson Girdlestone, again tender their services.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE Commander-in-Chief, after reviewing the troops at Umballa on March 14, proceeded to Patiala and inspected the forces of the Maharaja. These consisted of one Field and one Garrison battery, two and a half regiments of Cavalry, and five battalions of Infantry—in all about 3,000 men. Sir Frederick Roberts complimented the commanding officers on the efficiency and appearance of their respective arms.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL SIR R. Low, at present in Burma, has been transferred from the Command of the Sealkote Brigade to the Rohilkhand district, while Brigadier-General Collett, also on service in Burma, has been posted to Sealkote.

GENERAL SIR THOS. BAKER takes up the command of the Rawul Pindi Division from General Dillon, whose time expires April 1. Major-General Lynch succeeds General Baker in the Allahabad command.

CAPTAIN HANFORD FLOOD, 2nd Queen's, has been appointed A.D.C. to General Lynch.

Sanction has been given for the formation of standing camps for young and weakly soldiers at Dalhousie, Ranikhet, and Chakrata, similar to those formed last year for the hot season and for the same number of men.

A ROYAL ARTILLERY officer who, on completion of the term of service fixed for his staff appointment, is detained in India under competent authority pending his appointment to a battery in India, will be allowed the pay and allowances of his rank for the interregnum, provided no undue delay occurs in MAJOR FLETCHER, Superintendent of the Gun Carriage Factory, is going home on leave. It is expected that Captain Collingwood Townsend of Bombay will act for him.

MAJOR BOUGHEY, R.E., on return from furlough, resumes charge of the managership of the Eastern Bengal Railway. Major Sargeaunt, who has been officiating, goes to Bombay to officiate as Consulting Engineer for Railways in the place of Major Firebrace, who takes furlough shortly.

THE Summer Musketry Schools will open this year as follows:—At Chungla Gully and Pachmari there will be two classes, the first to assemble on 1st May and terminate on 30th June, the second to assemble on 23rd August and terminate on 22rd October. Captain Wright, D.A.A.G. for Musketry, 3rd Class, and Captain Sir R. Colleton, D.A.A.G. for Musketry, 3rd Class, and Captain Sir R. Colleton, D.A.A.G. for Musketry, 1st Circle, are appointed chief and junior instructors to the Pachmari School, and Major Barlow and Major Cave to be instructors at the Chungla Gully School. Ten officers of British regiments, ten of Native regiments, twenty warrant officers and sergeants, ten Native officers and ten duffadars and havildars will be detailed by General Officers to attend each class. For Madras there will be two classes, viz., one from 8th June to 16th August, and the other from 1st September to 30th October. There will be only one class in the Bombay Presidency, which will assemble on 1st June and terminate on 30th July.

THE 4th Bengal Infantry paraded at Jhansi on March 14 under Lieutenant-Colonel Eliot, commanding, for the presentation of Burma medals by Brigadier-General Marter, A.D.C., commanding the district. The Brigadier addressed the regiment, congratulating all who had so well earned their medals, and saving that their work in Ruyma was a good finals to a and saying that their work in Burma was a good finale to a and saying that their work in Burma was a good finale to a noble record of war services since the regiment was first embodied in 1798. Amongst the first recipients was Subadar Bahadur Baakram Chauhi, who earned the Order of British India for a plucky march with his company to Kendat under Sir J. Johnstone, whereby the lives of several Europeans were saved. For gallantry on several occasions on the Burma-Munipur frontier seven Orders of Merit were won by the regiment; the General congratulating those recipients who were present. were present.

COLONEL MONTAGUE PROTHEROE, C.B., C.S.I., Madras Staff Corps, Deputy Adjutant-General, has been appointed Quarter-master-General of the Madras Army, in succession to Brigadiermaster-General of the Madras Army, in succession to Brigadier-General E. Faunce, appointed to the command of a brigade in Burma. Colonel Protheroe served in the Abyssinian War in 1867-68 (medal). He served in the Afghan War of 1870-80 as Aide-de-Camp to Lieutenant-General Sir Donald Stewart, Commanding Kandahar Field Force, and took part in the operations in the Kama District and at Besud; he accompanied Sir Frederick Roberts in the march to Kandahar, and was present at the battle of Kandahar (mentioned in despatches, C.S.I., medal with clasp, and bronze decoration). He served with the Burmese expedition in 1885-86 as Deputy Assistant Adjutant and Quartermaster-General (mentioned in despatches, promoted Colonel C.B., and medal with clasp). He is the only Madras officer on the active list who is member of the two Orders of the Bath and the Star of of India. Two retired Madras officers belong to the two Orders, namely, Major-General Sir Frederick Goldsmid, K.C.B., C.S.I., and Inspector-General Sir William Mackenzie, K.C.B., C.S.I.

MR. BARRINGTON BROWN, the Geologist, sent out by the Secretary of State for India to report on the Ruby Mines in Upper Burma, is, it is said, to receive a salary of £200 per mensem during his engagement, which is at present for six months, and to have all his travelling expenses paid by Government.

Some one in Burma sent an order to England for a life-size statue in bronze of Sir Arthur Phayre, but there is no one who will jump at the order for the sum offered, £700 to £800, which is considered to be, at the present price of bronze, not to talk of labour, totally inadequate. Burma must grow its own artists or raise the price.

SILK

At a recent meeting of the Provisional Committee of the Silk Association of Great Britain and Ireland, held in the Mayor's Parlour at the Manchester Town Hall—Mr. Thomas Wardle, the President, in the chair—a code of rules was adopted in which the objects of the Association were set forth as follows:—"The promotion and maintenance of the silk industry of Great Britain and Ireland in all its branches; to encourage the production of raw silk in India and our colonies; to collect and disseminate among its members useful information and statistics connected with or affecting manufacture and commerce in silk; to promote technical, commercial, and linguistic education, and any necessary Parliamentary legislation, and generally to assist in the expansion and development of the trade, &c.; to do all such other lawful things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects, or any of them." It was also decided that the Association should advocate a change in the Carriers' Act with regard to silk goods. It was resolved that the membership of the Association should include silk manufacturers, merchants, dyers, and finishers, and any who may be bond fide interested in promoting the welfare of the silk industry. Any Chamber of Commerce may become affiliated with the Association, and have the power to appoint yearly a representative to sit on the Council of the Silk Association—a privilege which has already been used by Chambers of Commerce in London, Glasgow, Manchester, Halifax, Derby, Leek, and Macelesfield. It was resolved that a meeting of all the silk dyers and finishing can best be represented and promoted by the Association, and the held in London meeting of the Council of the Association, should be held in London At a recent meeting of the Provisional Committee of the Silk Assocan best be represented and promoted by the Association, and that a meeting of the Council of the Association should be held in London during the silk sale week in June next.

THE report of the National Bank of India (Limited) as at Dec. 31 last shows a net profit for the year, including the amount brought forward, of £43,156. An interin dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum was paid for the half-year ending June 30, and it is now proposed to make a similar distribution for the past half-year, to place £15,000 to the reserve fund, and to carry forward £4,893.

THE Calcutta Port Commission, while thanking Mr. Duff Bruce for the scheme he has submitted for a fixed Howrah Bridge, are not at present prepared to recommend its construction. The Deputy Conservator, having thoroughly considered the scale of crews for vessels in port, does not think it expedient to advise a reduction.

THE Bombay Gazette says: -In these days of financia! depression, when we all have to submit as best we can to paying a tax upon our incomes, when Government servants are mulcted in their travelling and tentage allowances, and when even the poorest have to pay their quota to the common fund in the shape of taxes on salt and petroleum, any suggestion should be welcome which would point out a way to increase the public revenue without imposing any burden whatever upon the taxpayer. We venture to think that a contribution to the resources of the Imperial Exchequer, not too small to be beneath notice, would be made by the simple process of abolishing service postage stamps. The Post Office is for departmental and statistical purposes worked as a separate financial unit, Government paying it at a certain rate for the carriage of letters and other work done by the department on its behalf. As the Post Office is of course nothing more or less than a department ing a tax upon our incomes, when Government servants are Post Office is of course nothing more or less than a department of Government, payments of this nature are merely nominal; and they form a process akin to that of taking money out of one pocket to put it into the other. It would probably come tomuch the same in the end if a fixed annual grant were made by Government to the Post Office; the elaborate calculations now employed to ascertain the exact amount which Government is indebted to one of its own departments being no longer neces-This however need not be urged at present. It should sary. This, however, need not be urged at present. It should suffice if the use of postage stamps for letters on Her Majesty's service should be discontinued. Postage stamps are not printed for nothing. On the contrary, the process is a very expensive one. The number of labels used on Government letters must be numbered by millions. It follows that if no more were printed the Treasury would be relieved of a charge amounting to some thousands of pounds a year, which now have to be re mitted to London. The sole object of these stamps is to show the amount of work done by the Post Office for Government. This, however, need not be urged at present. They form no guarantee against the practice of sending private letters under Government covers. This might be done now by any clerk in a public office. Were the stamps discontinued letters under Government covers. This might be done now by any clerk in a public office. Were the stamps discontinued letters would be franked by the despatching clerk alone, as they have to be now in addition to the imposition of the stamp. If it is necessary to ascertain the total annual weight of letters, &c., carried on behalf of Government, that could be done as easily without as with the stamps. All letters despatched from public offices are weighed and the annual totals of each office could be reported to Government at the end of the year, and a grand total arrived at. Much labour in dealing with these stamps in treasuries would be saved by their discontinuance. They are not used in England, and if the Home Post Office can manage without them why not the Indian one?

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The Great Handel Festival that is held triennially at the Crystal Palace occurs this year. It is as unique in respect of the numbers who take part in it, and as regards its character, as it is in its art effects. The result of a national organisation carefully maintained and used during. many years, the 4,000 performers brought together are individually proficient in their several parts, and their united efforts are to be rated as absolutely alone in the sublimity of musical effect. The organisation is possible only in England, where our cathedral choirs exist as a nucleus for the provincial sections of the great chorus, and, together with the county and local choral associations, whose members take part in the festival, are familiar by practice with the music of Handel. This widespread knowledge is a most important element. There is, moreover, more than mere musical delight conducing to the way the Handel Festival is received by the public; there is much of a religious feeling that tends to give the occasion a significance of its own—peculiar perhaps to England, for which Handel wrote his masterpieces. Mr. August Manns and all his coadjutors are already working actively to carry out the musical arrangements with most scrupulous care, so that the performances in June may be, if possible, more perfect than ever. The most distinguished solosingers have been engaged, among whom Madame Albani, Madame Nordica, Miss Annie Marriot, Madame Valleria, Madame Patey, Madame Trebelli, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Mr. Barton McGuckin, Mr. Santley, Mr. Bridson, and Mr. Brereton are to be particularised.

DR. CUST proves up to the hilt, from their own sacred works and dramas, that intoxicating liquors were known to the Hindus, and by no means always used with temperance, as far back as the dawn of their history; and that though the Brahmins and highest class of Mahomedans have been abstinent, the mass of the people have at no time been total abstainers. In a word "it might as well be said that the British introduced the use of gunpowder and calico garments as of liquor and drugs." And if it is easy to show that we did not find India sober in the sense of being unacquainted with alcoholic liquor or universally temperate or abstinent, it with alcoholic liquor or universally temperate or abstinent, it is no less easy to show that we have not "left it drunken." The amount of liquor annually consumed in India would drench England; but for the whole of India the average consumption is about a bottle or a bottle-and-a-half peradult male—a mere fraction of the English average. The Piccadilly critics, in remarking on the swelling excise revenue, ricadilly critics, in remarking on the swelling excise revenue, made no allowance for the increase in wealth and population; they ignored the fact that liquor was taxed as heavily as possible without prompting illicit distillation; and they were probably entirely ignorant of the fact that the supervision of the outstill is fully as strict as that of English public-houses. "I am in the habit," writes Dr. Cust, "of assisting annually in the grant of licenses in Westminster and Kensington to publice and I doubt whether so much power of control and publicans, and I doubt whether so much power of control and publicans, and I doubt whether so much power of control and restraint of opportunities for sale of liquor exists in London as in Lahore and Allahabad." A pious M.P. was once very much scandalised at hearing that a Colonial Governor had a large number of wallabies living in his palace; he thought the word meant—anything but young kangaroos. There are many in England who seem to labour under a very similar delusion regarding the outstill, regarding it as an engine of iniquity to which a Whitechapel gin-trap is a Sunday-school. Dr. Cust's pamphlet will show them their error.—Pioneer.

A MONTHLY RECORD OF INFORMATION FOR

PLANTERS OF

Tea Cacoa, Cinchona, Coffee, Indiarubber, Sugar, Palms, Cotton, Cardamoms, Kola, Coca, Cinnamon, Nutmegs, Fibrous plants, and other Products suited for Cultivation in the Tropics.

[Published at Observer Office, Colombo, Ceylon, on or about the 1st of each month. Commenced in June, 1881.]

"THE TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST" has now an assured position in its large circulation in Ceylon, Southern and even Central and Northern India, the Straits Settlements, Sumatra, Java, Borneo, Northern Australia, Queensland, Central America, Natal, Mauritius, and the West Indies. From all sub-tropical planting settlements we have had cordial approval of the publication and an encouraging measure of support. The English, Indian, and Colonial Press have spoken in commendatory terms of the T. A., as also Directors of Public Gardens, from Sir Joseph Hooker, F.R.S. downwards and so have all planters F.R.S., downwards, and so have all planters.

 No planter should be without it

THE "TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST."

As a medium for English, American, and Australian ADVERTISEMENTS of goods suitable for the tropics, India, as well as Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Java, and West Indies (Central America being included in that term), or connected with agriculture, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST stands unrivalled, the work being constantly in the hands of Native as well as European and American agriculturists. Being a Monthly Periodical, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST lies on the table and is very often referred to during each month, a fact which advertisers will know how to appreciate.

Mr. W. T. Thiselton Dyer, F.L.S., C.M.G., Assistant Director of Kew Gardens, writing of the T. A., refers to it as "an astonishing repertory of everything relating to the economic botany of the East."

 For the sale of plants, seeds, machinery, implements, &c., used in tropical (tea, sugar, fibres, &c.) agriculture, no better advertising medium exists.

Wanted agents, at home and abroad, to obtain orders for watches and jewellery on our new instalment system, by weekly or monthly payments. Most beneficial to subscribers and agents. Also trustworthy men wanted in every ship, regiment, and battery to act as agents, to enable naval and military men to secure good, reliable watches at a small profit above the actual cost. Naval and military agents when leaving the service, desirous of being appointed district agents or travellers, are invited to apply for the post; but preference will be given to those agents who procure the most orders during their agency in the service. The means of earning a good income were never before placed so easily in the reach of intelligent, energetic naval or military men retiring from the service. Terms and catalogues free.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman. October 1886.

"VOICE OF INDIA." THE

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PHOPLE CF

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing Morrhux (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian veople.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seem that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than objustice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value tajournalists and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, in that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value tajournalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, APRIL 16, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 30th March; from Allahabad and Madras to the 28th March; and from Calcutta to the 27th March.

A GREAT farewell demonstration in honour of Lord and Lady Dufferin took place in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Friday, March 23rd. Lord Dufferin, on replying to an address, reviewed at considerable length the administration of the affairs of India during the period of his viceroyalty, and vindicated the policy which he had adopted in Afghanistan and Burma.

An address was also presented to the Countess of Dufferin, who, in reply, made an appeal on behalf of the National Association for Supplying Female Medical Aid to the Women of India.

THE Lingtu fort was occupied by Colonel Graham's force on March 21st without firing a shot. The Thibetans, after their experiences in the skirmish with our troops a few days previously, did not await an attack.

A DETACHMENT from Colonel Graham's force at Lingtu is to be sent out in the direction of the Jelap Pass to reconnoitre. The Lamas still cling to a policy of masterly inactivity in the matter of communications, neither answering our messages nor opening overtures.

THE Financial Statement for 1888-89 has been published in the form of a minute by Mr. Westland. The Budget estimates for 1888-89, which are made up at the 1s. 4-9d. rate of exchange, show a surplus of £423,000.

THE families of Mr. Nusserwanjee Maneckjee Petit and Sir Dinshaw Petit have subscribed close upon ten lakhs of rupees for various charitable purposes on the occasion of the death of the son of the former.

NINE Indian artisans for the Glasgow International Exhibition left Calcutta on March 26th, in the steamer Clan Matheson. Two are Punjabis, and seven Bengali Hindoos. Among them are two woodcarvers, two jewellers, two potters, two Brahmin sweetmeat-makers, and one barber. All the exhibits for the Exhibition have now been despatched.

THE Bombay Port Trustees have applied to Government for permission to borrow Rs. 700,000 less any portion of the sinking fund of 1887-88, which the completed accounts for the year may show to be available on debentures for ten years at 5 per cent., in order to meet the loan of seven lakhs, which falls due on the 2nd of May next.

THERE has been a pitched battle at a place called Salliya between one of the gangs of dacoits who infest the Gwalior territory and the durbar troops. The latter lost a Sepoy killed, and two dangerously wounded, besides minor casualties; but they killed the two leaders of the outlaws and five of their followers.

A MEMORIAL portrait of Sir Richard Garth has been placed in the Calcutta Chief Justice's Court, occupying the place where Sir Elijah Impey's portrait hung, which has been sent home for repair. The unveiling ceremony was performed by Sir Comer Petheram.

GENERAL SIR GEORGE WHITE remains another year in the Burma Command, but he will take three months' leave during the summer, when Brigadier-General Sir R. Lowe will officiate.

THE quarters for the Nursing Sisters at Rawal Pindi have been completed. They are situated close to the various hospitals, and seem fairly suitable.

A SEVERE hailstorm has passed over Silchar. As yet no reports have been received from the gardens; but there can be little doubt that several gardens have suffered.

A TELEGRAM from the Resident in Kashmir, dated the 22nd March, reports that cholera had again broken out in Jammu, and that fifteen cases and seven deaths have been reported within the last three days.

At the meeting of the Provincial Legislative Council at Lucknow it was decided by a majority that it was not advisable to proceed with the Bill for regulating the possession and sale of poisons.

COLONEL LUARD, R.E., at present on furlough, will be appointed to the Chief Engineership of Lower Bengal.

THE Maharao Reja of Boondi has addressed a kharita to the Viceroy, placing at the disposal of the British Government the resources of his State for the defence of the frontiers of India. The old chief has ruled his State since I821, so that his memories go back to the days of Tod and Malcolm.

THE Commissionership vacant in the Central Provinces when Mr. Chisholm take furlough from Raipur goes, it is understood, to Mr. A. H. L. Fraser, acting Secretary to the Chief Commissioner. Mr. Anderson, Deputy Commissioner of Jubbulpore, succeeds to the Secretaryship in place of Mr. Fraser.

The manager of the North-Western Railway has been good enough to make an arrangement by which soldiers proceeding on furlough can travel second-class on payment of third-class fare, which will be a great boon to those going on leave to the hills in the hot weather.

A VALUABLE archæological find has been lately made in the Azamgarh district in the shape of a copper-plate grant recording, in later Gupta characters, the grant by King Harshavardhana of Sthanisvara of a village to several Brahmins for the spiritual welfare of his parents and elder brother.

THE subscriptions to the Dufferin Memorial Fundalready amount to Rs. 23,300.

THIRTY-SEVEN prisoners escaped from the jails and subsidiary jails of Bengal last year.

At the annual Convocation of the Madras University held on the 20th March, at which Lord Connemara as Chancellor presided, there were presented thirty-one candidates for the degree of Bachelor of Law, three for that of Bachelor of Medicine, seven for Licentiate of Medicine and Surgery, one for Bachelor of Civil Engineering, three for Licentiate of Teaching, four for Master of Arts, and 176 for Bachelor of Arts.

A MYSTERIOUS tragedy occurred in Calcutta on the 26th March. Dr. Ketter Nath Mitter, a medical man of some repute, and his second son, a lad sixteen years of age, were sleeping in the same room in their house in Cornwallisstreet. About one o'clock the other inmates of the house heard shots fired into the room, and, on entering it, found both father and son lying on their respective bedsbleeding profusely from bullet wounds. Both were shotthrough the right side. They were taken to the hospital, and, as the father is in a critical state, his deposition was taken by a Magistrate. He says that he was wakened by a pain in his right side, but heard no shot fired, and knows nothing more. He was on good terms with his son. The latter says he saw a man in the room, who fired at his father and then at him, and ran away. An elder son of the family has since confessed that he shot his relatives through spite.

THERE has been more fighting on the Gilgit border between the tribesmen of Hunza and Nagar and the Kashmir troops. It will be remembered that about a couple of months ago the former made a raid into Kashmir ground, and surprised a couple of petty forts or posts called Chaprot and Chilput. The Kashmir Durbar was said to be collecting a force to retake these places, which have often changed hands under similar circumstances before, and no more was heard about it. It seems, however, that the tribesmen must have made further progress, for the last news is of a sortie made on the 17th March by the garrison of Noomal, which would imply that these troops had met with some previous reverse. On this occasion, however, they gained a decided success, driving back the besiegers with heavy loss, and compelling them to retreat. The Kashmiris themselves are reported to have lost a Colonel and ten men killed and twenty-three wounded, so that the loss of the men of Hunza and Nagar must have been something considerable, and it may induce them to desist for some time to come.

A LAHORE paper alludes mysteriously to something that is going to happen to Kashmir. Several Madras and Bombay officers have passed through Murree, not being on leave; and some of the 5th Goorkhas have gone up to Baramula. Strange and persistent rumours are abroad that annexation is intended, and "we will not undertake to say that they are groundless." In point of fact (says the Pioneer) they are not only groundless, but mischievous nonsense into the bargain.

NOTES.

THERE is not much news of interest or importance from India to-day, either by telegraph or overland dawk. The reports from Burma are certainly not very satisfactory, telling, as they do, of continued raids by dacoits, and of increasing difficulties in securing peace and quietude in Upper Burma. The stupidity in directing a general disarmament of even the loyal and peaceable population has mow been bearing the evil results anticipated.

The chief topic discussed by the Indian newspapers to hand is, of course, Mr. Westland's Budget for 1888-89. The tone adopted is one of hopefulness regarding the future of Indian Finance, although it is allowed that Exchange, Opium, and Famine are all "elements of uncertainty" which have to be taken into account.

THE Englishman says that a striking contrast is exhibited between the financial condition of the Provincial Government and that of the Empire. "According to Mr. Westland, not one of the Provincial Governments but is provided with revenue enough for its present scale of expenditure, or, rather, which has incurred any permanent obligations as to expenditure which are beyond the scale of its revenue. Moreover, all the principal ones have balances, which they are seeking the means of profitably expending. Their position is in curious contrast with that of the Imperial Government."

The deficit of Rs. 698,000 is looked upon by the same authority rather hopefully than depressingly. We are told that "the ultimate point in retrenchment has been reached, and we can receive a Budget showing a deficit of 69 lacs with chastened feelings. We must seek consolation in the Micawber-like hope that something will turn up to save the Government from the necessity of resorting to further heroic measures in order to meet the possible demands of the future."

LORD DUFFERIN'S speech at the public meeting called at Calcutta to say farewell to him was an able vindication of the policy which he has pursued during his Viceroyalty. He, of course, detended as not only necessary but wise the costly expenditure which has been going on regarding the detences of the North-West Frontier. He considered the new settlement of the Russo-Afghan frontier as a "valuable diplomatic achievement," and he declared that "he could point with very proper satisfaction to the great change which has occurred in the disposition of the Amir and his subjects towards the English since the date of his personal intercourse with the Afghan ruler in 1885."

His defence of the annexation of Upper Burma was concise and complete: For years India had been drawing surplus revenue from Lower Burma, and when the trade of the latter was endangered by the lawlessness and anarchy prevalent in the dominions of King Thebaw even purely fiscal considerations would have led us to interfere. It was not reasonable, his Excellency went on to say, to talk of present expenditure without recollecting that it is only temporary, and that in future India will draw from Upper Burma larger surpluses than she has over done from the Lower Province.

AFTER referring to the offers made by the Native Chiefs as an example of patriotism and loyalty which had seldom been witnessed, Lord Dufferin concluded his brilliant farewell address at Calcutta by saying:—

Well address at Calcutta by saying:—

You all know how deeply I have had at heart the interests and welfare of all classes of the community; how impartially I have endeavoured to promote the welfare of each in turn; how faithful I have been to that obligation which has been always felt by the Government of India to see in every subject of the Queen not a member of any sect, caste, or religion, but a citizen of the Empire, possessed of rights and privileges which are equally the property of all. What can I say to you Europeans and Natives alike but this—Whatever you do, live in unity and concord and good-fellowship with each other. Fate has united both races in community of interests, and neither can do without the other. The rule of England maintains peace and justice within the borders of India and securesits safety from outside dangers; but that rule cannot be exercised either effectually or acceptably without the loyalty and assistance of the Native races. Therefore, again I say, co-operate with each other in a generous and genial spirit. I confess I would rather see Europeans, Hindus and Mahomedans united in criticising Government, than that Hindus and Mahomedans, Europeans and Natives, should become estranged from each other by unworthy prejudices or animosities of race and religion. God forbid that the British Government should ever seek to maintain its rule in India by fomenting race-hatreds amongst its subjects. Thank Heaven its antecedents, its strength, its self-confidence and its dignity, will for ever render a resort to such expedients unnecessary and impossible.

HIS EXCELLENCY having given counsel to all who listened to him, even to "those amongst his Native friends who, imbued with the political literature of the West, are seeking to apply to India the lessons they have learnt from constitutional countries," paid a graceful tribute to his own wife, saying that his lady "was the first instance of a Viceroy's consort who was more popular in India than the Viceroy, and whose name would endure longer."

THE Pioneer, commenting on this, says that it may be the exaggeration of an admirable gallantry, but "there can be no question that Lady Dufferin has made for herself a name such as no English lady in India ever did before, and, while in the case of a ruler like the Viceroy, there must always be a leaven of convention in the addresses of congratulation received, the acknowledgments tendered to Lady Dufferin express the spontaneous and heartfelt sentiments of all India."

The Duke and Duchess of Montrose, who were the guests of Lord and Lady Reay, left Bombay for Europe by the last mail steamer. They arrived at the Apollo Bunder in a Government House Carriage about 4.30 p.m., accompanied by Captain Hamilton, Aide-de-Camp to the Governor, and were met by Captain Hext, Director of the Indian Marine, and Captain Buller, Aide-de-Camp to the Governor, and left bunder soon afterwards in a Government steam launch. Sir Thomas and Lady Thompson have also left Bombay. They were met at the bunder by Sir Frank and Lady Souter, Colonel Portman, and one or two other gentlemen, with whom they proceeded to the steamer. Sir Tatton and Lady Sykes and Mr. Moreton Frewen were also passengers by the same steamer.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 15.

Details have now been received of the tremendous wind storm which has lately devastated Dacca. A little rain fell early in the evening and then ceased. Half-an-hour later, at seven o'clock, densely black clouds suddenly appeared in the south-west, and almost immediately a hurricane of terrific force swept through Dacca, destroying every obstacle in its south-west, and almost immediately a hurricane of terrific force swept through Dacca, destroying every obstacle in its course. It lasted barely three minutes, and was succeeded by complete calm. Fortunately the width of the storm's track was only about 500 feet. It struck the west of the town, and, after completely wrecking the large stone police barracks and a large number of huts, crossed the river, and made a circuitous sweep, utterly destroying several villages, then recrossing the river it attacked with unabated fury the magnificent palace of the leading Mahomedan of Dacca, Sir Abdul Gani Mia. It then pursued its course through the most densely populated quarter. The appearance of Dacca is described as like that of a bombarded city. The largest and most massive houses are heaps of ruins. The west wing of the Nawab's palace is a mass of broken masonry, the splendid furniture being entirely destroyed. Balls of flame are said to have been observed accompanying the hurricane. The college, the church, and other public buildings and the houses occupied by Europeans, being outside the track of the storm, were uninjured. Up to this date 112 dead bodies have been recovered, and 1,000 cases are being treated in the hospital. The loss of property is estimated at Rs.100,000. The Nawab's estimated loss is Rs.50,000. He has generously subscribed Rs.10,000 to the relief fund. His European engineer had a narrow escape, for the roof fell on him, and a Native by his side was killed by a falling beam. Storms of this character are almost unknown in India. The weather has, however, been abnormal, owing the part the fact that during March and April there was an entire in India. The weather has, however, been abnormal, owing to the fact that during March and April there was an entire absence of the usual local storms.

In the course of a speech made in reply to an address of the Mahomedans at Lucknow the Viceroy said:—

"An additional pleasure in coming to India was to remember that one of my duties was to watch over the interests of fifty millions of Mahomedan subjects. This body alone constitutes a powerful nation. Remembering the additional splendid antecedents attaching to their history, a ruler would be devoid of all political feeling if he neglected to endeavour to bring their status into harmony with the general political system. The Mahomedans had long occupied a disadvantageous position in relation to their Hindoo fellow-subjects. The Government of the control of ment was precluded by the principle of State impartiality from doing much to remedy this; but by the resolution of July 15, 1885, it endeavoured to give a satisfactory proof of its sincere solicitude."

In conclusion, he urged the various communities to live together in peace and good fellowship. Divergences of race, differences of religion, and historical circumstances causing differences and divergencies must inevitably occasion discrepancies of opinion on political and social functions; but the causes which generated these evanescent fires were absolutely insignificant in presence of the mightier forces which worked for peace and amity. Nothing better exemplified history than the absolute indifference of subsequent generations to dispute for which their forefithers had presented and destroyed each for which their forefathers had persecuted and destroyed each than at the present moment. While the prince in his palace is conscious that his throne is as irrevocably secured to him and his dynasty as that of the Queen-Empress herself, at the sam time the zemindar in his country house, the trader in his shop, and the humble peasant in his cabin are equally convinced that where they have sown there shall they reap, and that English might and justice, ever ready to protect the Empire from outward aggression, will equally assure to every citizen the untroubled enjoyment of his rights and privileges."

The Viceroy's visit to Cashmere has been abandoned owing to an outbreak of cholera in the Srinagur district. This is a little unfortunate, as he is specially required to settle some matters of State in Cashmere.

A case is reported from Rajcote, in Kattiwar, of a police peon running amuk, killing five and wounding six persons. He first entered a room where a police officer and a Native clerk were counting money for the pay of the police. He drew his sword, murdered both, and then rushed out and attacked every person he met. Having struck eleven persons, he was met by a Parsee, who showed considerable presence of mind, and challenged him to stop, upon which he quietly delivered up his sword. Having asked for water, he then said quietly, "I have killed many," and walked to the police-station, where he surrendered himself.

RANGOON, APRIL 14.

The Tsagain district in Upper Burma is again in a very disturbed condition, especially in the neighbourhood of Myinmu. This large village was attacked last week by a band of dacoits over 200 strong. While the main body assailed the northern side of the village some thirty dacoits made for the house of a loyal Thoogyee, and attempted to murder him. The Thoogyee, however, escaped. The dacoits then fired Myinmu. The flames spread, and 160 houses in the village were burnt down. Two policemen were killed and two more wounded by the dacoits. In the neighbourhood Inspector Wooldridge and seven of the military police fell into a dacoits' ambuscade, two policemen being killed and two wounded. Several other dacoities accompanied with murder are reported from the Tsagain district.

Captain Raikes, the able and energetic officiating Commissioner of the Central Division, has proceeded to Tsagain, accompanied by other civil officers and by Colonel Symons, with some mounted infantry, to assist Mr. Colquhoun, Deputy-Commissioner, in restoring order. Vigorous measures will be taken to quell these disturbances. Tsagain is, owing to the nature of the country, a difficult district to deal with. Dacoit bands when attacked break up into small parties, and find easy shelter in the forest and hills.

In conclusion he said:—

"I shall resign my great office at the end of the year with many regretful feelings, but also with a most grateful recollection of the universal indulgence with which my humble endeavours to perform my duties have been met. I am already the oldest Viceroy that ever ruled India, and I feel that the time has come when, in the public interest, the heavy responsibilities of the office should be confided to the hands of a younger man. But I carry away the consolation of knowing that at no time in the past hundred years has there prevailed a deeper feeling of security with reference to all the great interests upon which the happiness of every nation depends

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE FEUDATORY PRINCES AND THE DEFENCE OF INDIA.

(Pioneer.)

It is now some five months since the Nizam's patriotic offer to aid in the general defence of India was made known; and beyond the grateful acknowledgment of that offer, first by the Vicercy and afterwards by the Queen-Fmpress herself, no action has apparently been taken to fan the flame of royalty action has apparently been taken to fan the flame of royalty which blazed up so brightly at Hyderabad and quickly spread to other parts of the country. We use the word "apparently" advisedly, because the public cannot be in a position to judge what has really been done by the authorities responsible for the safety of India. It is no easy matter to decide how the offers of material aid made by the feudatory Princes shall be applied; but we may, perhaps, find a partial solution of the question by examining the terms of the offers themselves. These may be ranged under two heads: (1) those in which specified sums of money are offered at once, and (2) those in which money and troops, personal service and the resources of the particular State are offered in case of war. The former may be tabulated as follows:—

Hyderabad			•••	Rs.	60,00,000
Kashmir	•••	•••	•••	,,	10,00,000
Jodhpur	•••	•••	•••	"	10,00,000
Bhurtpur	•••	•••	•••	"	8,00,000
Kota	•••	•••	•••	"	6,00,000
Kapurthala Nabha	•••	•••	•••	"	50,00,00 4,00,000
Maler Kotla (navet	A li Kha	m)	"	80,000
Maier Kona (.mayeur	711 17110	,	"
		Total	•••	,,	103,80,000

The actual money offers thus amount to nearly 104 lakhs of rupees, though in the case of Hyderabad, Jodhpur and Bhurtpur the payments would be spread over three, five, and ten years respectively. The Chiefs of the States above enumerated offer, as a rule, something more than money, recognising loyally that as feudatories of a great Empire they are bound when danger declares itself to make common cause against the when danger declares itself to make common cause against the common enemy. Thus, in the event of war, the Nizam offers his "sword," a figure of speech which all can understand; the Maharaja of Kashmir his troops and materials of war, and his personal services; the Maharaja of Jodhpur will, in time of emergency, place at the disposal of the Government all the resources of his State, his services and those of the members of his family; the Maharaja of Bhurtpur will give, in case of war as many troops as be spared, from his teritory; the Kota chief will, in time of necessity, give the services of himself, his jagirdars and his troops; while the Raja of Kapurthala offers the services of his troops, a contingent being specially drilled and prepared for special service, the assistance of Government being asked for drilling and arming the contingent. arming the contingent.

So far we have dealt with Chiefs who come in category 1. Turning now to 2, in which case no specified sum of money is offered, we find the Maharaja of Mysore expressing a wish to "raise and maintain a suitable military force trained by to "raise and maintain a suitable military force trained by British officers lent to him for the purpose, so that his State may render valuable service on any occasion of Imperial need, it being his Highness's desire to take part in the military defence of the Empire." The Maharaja of Patiala offers the resources of his State in the shape of treasure, troops, &c., whenever required by Government; the Nawab of Bahawalpur, his existing contingent of troops, and according to his means the "outlay of his funds;" the Nawab of Tonk, the services of himself, his family, his troops, and the whole resources of his State; the Maharao Rajah of Alwar, money and troops whenever they may be of service to Government in securing the frontier of the Empire; the Nawab of Rampur will defray the expense incurred in raising and maintaining a native infantry regiment in case of war with Russia, and as long as the war lasts, together with all the resources of his State in time of war; the Raja of Jhind, all the existing resources of his lasts, together with all the resources of his State in time of war; the Raja of Jhind, all the existing resources of his State; the Raja of Mandi, his body and his State to the British Crown for use; the Raja of Suket, his services to the extent of his life and goods; the Raja of Faridkot, his "life and all the resources of his State whenever the Government require the services of Native Chiefs"; and the Nawab of Loharu, the services of himself and his brothers with his property and a caravan of fifty camels. The Raja of Chamba has actually given land, free of cost, near Bukloh, for cantonments for the 2nd battalion of the 4th Gurkhas.

Here, then, we have twenty Chiefs in all anxious to prove

Here, then, we have twenty Chiefs in all anxious to prove their loyalty. We have been thus particular in detailing the terms of the various offers, because in considering the practical application of them it is of the first importance to see in what rection the ideas of the Chiefs themselves tend. The Nizam, in his loyal desire to strengthen the hands of the Government, which would suffice for the building, say, of the seventy miles of strategic railway from Chaman to Kandahar—if it were deemed advisable to make that line at once. It was a generous deemed advisable to make that line at once. It was a generous offer—from whomsoever it may have originally emanated; but the acceptance and application of it in the way specified would have been unwise. Let it be considered as an earnest only of the Nizam's loyalty, and its value is by no means depreciated, even though immediate advantage may not be taken of it. The Maharajas of Jodhpur and Bhurtpur, in making their offers of ten and eight lakhs respectively, did not respectively. specify in exact terms, we believe, the way in which the money should be expended; they were willing to make annual payshould be expended; they were willing to make annual payments for five and ten years respectively, and to leave it to Government to dispose of their contributions. The Maharaja of Mysore and the Raja of Kapurthala struck what we think will prove the key-note of the future policy of Government. They wish to make a portion of their military forces thoroughly efficient, and for this end they ask for the assistance of British officers to train their contingents. This is a sensible and practical proposal; it will, if carried out, provide men in the hour of need, just as the capitalising of the Nizam's offer in the way already pointed out can be made to serve a similar purpose.

The feudatory Princes have armies already, but these are not up to the standard of efficiency required, and to make them so en bloc would involve an annual expenditure which the various States could not possibly stand. But small contingents various States could not possibly stand. But small "specially drilled and prepared for special service the Maharaja of Kapurthala's own words—can be formed and maintained without the financial strain being too severe; and we should be glad to see sufficient of these to constitute at least one good army corps, 40,000 strong. But care must be taken to estimate carefully the resources of each individual State, so as to prevent the burden of expense for military purposes being out of all proportion to the general expenditure on internal administration. The Government may assuredly venture to propound a scheme of defence in which every Chief will have a share. That scheme cannot be hastily elaborated; for the fullest information regarding the resources of each State, the wishes of its ruler, and the particular form in which state, the wisnes of its ruler, and the particular form in which he and his people can best contribute towards the defence of India, must be obtained before action is finally taken. Such information is now being collected from all parts of the country, and we doubt not that a practical issue will be arrived at before Lord Dufferin leaves India. It will fittingly crown the work which he has already done in safeguarding our frontiers arrived at took from without against attack from without.

INDIA AND THE P. AND O. COMPANY.

"L. S. S.," a correspondent of the Pioneer, has proposed that a stand be made by the Anglo-Indian public against the new policy of the P. and O. Company. He says:—

"The Indian public is, I believe, the most forbearing in the world, but even that body will turn at last; and the P. and O. Company, who have derived their power and wealth in no small measure from that public, must be made to feel that even they can go too far sometimes. They now propose to run local ships between Bombay and Aden and vice versa during the ships between Bombay and Aden and vice versa during the monsoon, a time when passenger traffic is no doubt slack, and the arrangement is one which probably could not be reasonably objected to if the steamers were well selected. But for this particularly trying passage they must select the two steamers called the Assam and Siam, which are the least suited for the voyage. Both steamers were built for the German Lloyd's Company, and were bought by the P. and O. They are utterly deficient in proper ventilation, so much required for this hot voyage during the monsoon, when the vessels often have to be battened down, to say nothing of the fact (mentioned by the Postmaster-General of India in his Report for 1886-87) of these two steamers being the only ones belonging to the P. and O. that were behind contract time during that were helind contract time during that were and in the that were behind contract time during that year, and in the new contract one of them has already run late by some hours, so they may presumably be said to be the slowest on the line. The time allowed under the hour contract during the monsoon is so absurdly long that this go-ahead Company promptly places the new contract, the steamers pass through the Canal instead of the passengers being taken across the Isthmus of Suez by the Egyptian Railway. It would therefore be supposed that the P. and O. would have remitted the sum of Rs. 30 they have the f. and O. would have remitted the sum of Rs. 30 they have hitherto collected on account of the Egyptian Railway fare. On a late reference to that Company, they decline the reduction, as they say that 'the charge for the Canal is the same.' The time for which Brindisi passengers are on board the steamers is less by one day. Why, then, should they be charged Rs. 30 extra in this account? Other grievances might be tackled at the same time, amongst which are the heavy charge for extra baggage (£10 a ton), when cargo is carried for £3 a ton; the differential passage money charged to Railway and State the differential passage money charged to Railway and State Railway Engineers; the charge of 300 per cent for soda-water, a bottle of which can be bought at I anna in Bombay and is charged for at 6 pence in Bombay Harbour, and many others, too numerous to mention. I would suggest that, in the first instance, a memorial to the Board of Directors should be prepared, setting forth our grievances and asking for redress, and, if this were not successful, other measures could be concerted hereafter. I am prepared to assist in drawing up such a memorial if, in every large station in India, one gentleman would consent to circulate such memorial and obtain signatures to it in his station. Some combination of this kind is necessary to ensure success. If you would collect the names of gentle men willing to assist in this matter you would be doing good service for a large number of your readers."

The Pioneer states that it will be glad, in compliance with its correspondent's suggestion, to receive the names of gentlemen willing to forward the proposed object.

DEATHS CAUSED BY WILD BEASTS. (Asian.)

On a former occasion we showed cause for questioning whether the Rs. 25,000 which the Government pays annually for killing poisonous snakes are judiciously expended. sum is only a fraction of the Rs. 1,89,005 which the Government paid in 1886 for what it calls 'the extermination of wild animals and poisonous snakes,' so that Rs. 1,64,645 remain to be accounted for. In 1885 the total amount expended was Rs. 2,24,126, so that there was a considerable reduction in 1886; but when the average annual expenditure amounts to about two lakhs of rupees it becomes a serious question whether the whole sum might not be economized. It may be remembered that 20,142 persons were killed by snake-bite, and Rs. 25,360 were paid for killing snakes. But only 2,707 persons were killed by wild beasts, and Rs. 1,64,645 were spent in rewards for the extermination of wild beasts. But are they really reterminated. for the extermination of wild beasts. But are they really exterminated? Of course tigers are the greatest offenders, but how is it that 928 persons were killed by tigers in 1886 when only 838 were killed in 1885? It is true that in Bengal there twas a great decrease in the number of tigers killed and in the amount of rewards paid. Sir Rivers Thompson explained that this was due to the interpretate of the property of the proper sufficiency of his Budget estimates, which seems a ridiculous excuse. At any rate the Bengal tigers took their opportunity, and killed 589 persons in 1886 instead of 510 in 1885. But and killed 589 persons in 1886 instead of 510 in 1886. But there is the greatest inconsistency in the amount paid in rewards in the different Presidencies. In Madras Rs. 18,170 were paid for 209 tigers; in Bengal Rs. 3,300 were paid for 245 tigers; in the Central Provinces 253 tigers cost the State Rs. 11,880; in Assam Rs. 8,710 were paid for 436 tigers. It is obvious that there is something radically wrong here. It may at vious that there is something radically wrong here. It may at times be necessary to offer special rewards for man killing tigers, but the scale of payment in Madras is manifestly excessive; and though the Central Provinces rate is much lower, it must and though the Central Provinces rate is much lower, it must surely be as difficult to kill a tiger in Assam as in Madras, or the Central Province. Out of 2,707 persons killed 1,169 were destroyed by "other animals," which are said to include jackals, mad dogs, wild pigs, moles, sharks, scorpions, wasps, and bulls. The Viceroy, or his Secretary, rebukes this novel and careless enumeration of "wild beasts." Rs. 6,852 were paid for their The Viceroy, or his Secretary, rebukes this novel and careless enumeration of "wild beasts." Rs. 6,852 were paid for their destruction, but no information is given to show the precise sum paid for killing a mole or a wasp. Thus there were only 1,638 persons who were killed by real wild beasts, whilst Rs. 1,57,798 were paid for killing the real wild beasts, which will probably appear to some persons to be a very high rate of insurance, especially as the form of insurance is so ineffectual.

URGENT CAVALRY REFORMS. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

There is one military reform of which the necessity becomes: There is one military reform of which the necessity becomes: year by year more apparent, and that is the abolition in Native Cavalry Regiments of the Silladar system, at any rate as a compulsory system. The old Bengal and Light Cavalry was a superbly mounted force; but it was supposed that the men were of an inferior class. A more probable explanation of its inefficiency was the preposterous nature of its equipment and the method of its training. The remedy was sought in equipping and forming the men of the new Bengal Cavalry efficiently, with uniform arms and horse gear which suited them efficiently, with uniform arms and horse gear which suited them. This was a most proper reform. But it was also sought in leaving them to mount themselves, which reform naturally resulted in a cavalry very inefficiently horsed. And from that hour to this the same system has been maintained. In those days cer-tain advantages were claimed for the system, in the stamp of men which it introduced. Gentlemen's sons with their remen which it introduced. Gentlemen's sons with their retainers, substantial yeomen, cadets of good families, were not uncommon in the ranks of the irregular cavalry regiments in early days. Even then the superior class of such troopers, who owned their own horses and had a little money, was counterbalanced by the poor stuff composing the retainers (or Bazgirs) of the richer men. Gradually, however, the superior class disappeared. The men who now compose the cavalry of this Presidency are of exactly the same stamp as would be still enresidency are of exactly the same stamp as would be still enlisted were that cavalry mounted by the Government. Their position would be a little altered. Instead of receiving Rs. position would be a little altered. Instead of receiving its 27 to Rs. 30 per mensem, they would receive probably Rs. 9 to Rs. 12 per mensem, and they would have no horse to keep, no chanda to pay, no debt for cost of horse and equipment to clear off. They would be better off, the regiments would be better mounted, and the State would be better served.

BENGAL.

THE following letter has been addressed to Colonel Chatterton, Commanding the Presidency Volunteers, by Lady terton, Commanding the Presidency Volunteers, by Lady Dufferin:—"Although I was quite unable at the time to say what I felt, I must now endeavour, however imperfectly, to convey to yourself and all the officers, non-commissioned officers, men, and cadets of the Presidency Volunteers, my warmest and grateful thanks for the very beautiful bracelet presented to me on Saturday. Such proof of your kindness and goodwill took me completely by surprise. I can only say that I was deeply touched by it, and that I thank you with all my heart. In conclusion, allow me to wish you and all the Prsidency Volunteers every possible good fortune. I trust you may be successful in all your competitions, and every year and further laurels to those you have already reaped.

THE increasing tendency in India to amalgamate teagardens for the sake of economy in working them is shown by a fall in the number of gardens in Assam from 941 in 1885-86 to 883 at the end of 1886-87. There was, notwithstanding, an increase of 18,288 acres in the area of land taken up for tea, which now amounts to 934,134 acres. The outturn of manufactured tea was the largest ever recorded, the total weight of tea manufactured being estimated at upwards of 61 million pounds. Improved methods of cultivation are increasing the average yield per acre. This average for the whole province last year is variously stated at 349 to 363 pounds, and it rose to 518 in Lakhimpur, which is the most productive district. In the districts of Sylhet and Cachar the outturn has increased an expensive of the productive district. enormously, and will, at the present rate, very soon equal that of the Assam Valley.

A MEMORIAL has gone up to the Viceroy praying for the provision of a suitable resting-place for the remains of the late King of Oudh, who among his other titles to posthumous consideration is euphemistically described as "an honoured guest of the British Government." The memorialists would like to see land purchased near the Garden Beach residence for the purpose of reising a suitable meanspleum thereon with for the purpose of raising a suitable mausoleum thereon, with adequate provision for alms, illuminations and "all other religious ceremonies observed by his late Majesty." The petition is backed by so many names of influence that we must suppose that the matter is one which really goes home in some way to Mahomedan national sentiment: but one can hardly imagine a character less fitted to excite any generous sympathy than that of Wajid Ali Shah.

than that of Wajid Ali Shah.

The writer of "Echoes of the Week" in the Saturday Evening Journal says:—I may, perhaps, be allowed to say a few farewell words to a gentleman who has been for a number of years thoroughly identified with Calcutta society, especially in all its sports and pastimes. I allude to Mr. F. B. Peacock, member of the Board of Revenue, and for some years Chief Secretary to the Bengal Government. It is no exaggeration to say that to know Mr. Peacock was to like him; and not only was this the case with his personal friends, but also with all who came in contact with him in business matters. With Mr. Peacock's departure we lose another of the familiar faces Mr. Peacock's departure we lose another of the familiar faces from our race-course which have been identified with racing in Calcutta for so many years. It seems but yesterday that the names of Lord Ulick Browne, Mr. Justice McDonell, and Mr. Keswick were to be seen at the head of the prospectus of the Calcutta race meetings, and with them for some years has been associated the name of Mr. F. B. Peacock. Now he, too, has gone, but fortunately we have good men and sport nas gone, but fortunately we have good men and sportsmen still remaining in Calcutta to carry on the famous traditions of our Calcutta race meetings. The Government has lost in Mr. Peacock a really clever and hard, working servant, and his many friends will hear with regret, that though he has nominally only gone on leave, it is very probable that he may not return to India."

THE splendid reception of the Viceroy on March 17th, writes the Englishman, at the distribution of prizes to the Calcutta Volunteers is deserving of remark as an unmistakable indication of the current of public feeling. Both his Excellency and the Countess of Dufferin were greeted with extraordinary enthusiasm, and it may be doubted whether a more striking outburst of popular sentiment has ever been witnessed and unexpected the demonstration was India. Unrehearsed and unexpected, the demonstration was almost dramatic in effect, and round after round of ringing cheers testified to the hold which their Excellencies have established on the regard and admiration of all classes. Volunteers and spectators alike were touched by the valedictory nature of the ceremony, and nothing could exceed the heartiness and spontaneity with which they gave voice to the inspiration of the moment. This powerful expression of or inspiration of the moment. This powerful expression of loyal attachment will find an echo, we are assured, in every corner of the wide Empire, alike among Europeans and Natives, who can unite in love of a noble ruler and exemplar, and to whom are equally dear those qualities of strength, insight, and sympathy which characterise the present administration. nistration.

MADRAS.

EXTENSIONS on a large scale are to be made to the premises of the Gun Carriage Factory, Madras. The Government has purchased a large piece of land whereon will be erected quarters for the accommodation of ninety artificers and four hundred lascars of the factory. Provision has also been made for a coal-yard.

H.H. THE NIZAM held a Durbar on March 26 for the reception of Mr. Howell, the new Resident, and for the presentation by the latter of the Viceroy's khareeta. Mr. Howell was accompanied by his own staff, the Major-General Commanding the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force and his staff, and by heads of departments.

BOMBAY.

THE Deputy Postmaster-General of Sind and Beluchistan has addressed the Chamber of Commerce, Karachi, bringing to notice that under the new contract with the P. and O. Company the outward mail steamer is due in Bombay at twelve noon on Mondays, but it is expected, as a rule, to arrive on the previous afternoon or night. He proposes, therefore, to recommend that the hour of departure of the direct steamer from Bombay be fixed at twelve noon on Sunday. It can then be detained if necessary till the actual arrival of the P. and O. steamer. This would give the public of Karachi the advantage of the change in the contract day of arrival of the steamer, and should it reach Bombay on the afternoon of Sundays, as is anticipated, the mail would be delivered in Karachi on Tuesday, allowing time for letters to be answered by the return mail steamer leaving Karachi on Wednesday.

THE total sales of Indian yarn in China during the preceding fortnight amounted to 7,000 bales, at prices a dollar higher, with an advancing market. Exchange on Bombay was quoted at Rs. 2203 per 100 dollars.

HIS HIGHNESS THE GAEKWAR intends to stay at Ootacamund for two months more, and the Ranee will, for family reasons, stay there for a longer period. Mr. Pestonjee D. Khandallawalla, Private Secretary, returns to Baroda to assume charge of the office of Palace Mayor at present.

As the Persian Consul-General, H.E. Mirza Kuli Khan, is proceeding to his native country, to take charge of a high ministerial appointment offered by his Highness the Shah of Persia, he was presented with a valedictory address by the Society for the Amelioration of the Condition of Parsees in Persia. The chair was occupied by Sir Dinshaw M. Petit, and purpose leading members of the community including Sir Jamsetji Jeejeebhoy, Bart., were present. After the presenta-tion of the address, the Consul gave a felicitous reply in Persian, warmly thanking the Parsee community for the hospitality they had shown to him during his sojourn in this city. A handsome tea and coffee set of silver, which was an excellent specimen of Cutch workmanship, was also presented to the departing representative of the Shah.

THE Bombay Municipal Corporation resumed consideration of the list of new works recommended by the Town Council for sanction. The following markets were among the large works passed by the meeting, subject to the sanction of Government being obtained to the raising of the necessary loan to defray their expenditure :—A new market at Colaba, consisting of 100 stalls, Rs. 50,300; erection of a new building consisting of 100 stalls, Rs. 50,300; erection of a new building in connection with the Arthur Crawford markets for mutton, so as to reserve the existing fish and mutton market for the sale of fish only. Some members of the Corporation took that occasion to urge the necessity of keeping fish markets in the best sanitary condition possible. Dr. Blaney repeated the suggestion he made some time ago that fish should be cut and exposed for sale on marble slabs. The Corporation were asked to sanction a sum of Rs. 2,63,875 for constructing a road through Nowroji Hill from Elphinstone Bridge to Dongristreet. Major Selby moved an amendment referring the question back to the Town Council for fresh estimates, so as to include frontages on both sides of the proposed road, so to include frontages on both sides of the proposed road, so far as might be desirable. The amendment was adopted.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

A MEETING of the Executive Committee of the North-West Provinces and Oudh Branch of the Countess of Dufferin's Fund was held at Allahabad, Sir Auckland Colvin presiding. The Budget, showing the receipts and expenditure for 1888, was finally approved; and arrangements were concluded for completing the buildings of the Agra Medical School, and for remodelling the teaching staff with a view to greater efficiency. The plans of the Lying-in Hospital at Agra, funds for which have been provided by the Central Branch, and which have received generally the approbation of Lady Dufferin, were laid before the Committee, and instructions given for their modification in certain points. An important paper drawn up by cation in certain points. An important paper drawn up by Dr. Rice, with suggestions for the better administration of female dispensaries, was also laid before the Committee, and directions were given that it should be printed and taken into consideration at the next meeting. A variety of minor matters occupied the attention of the Committee, and it was finally arranged that a public meeting be held at Lucknow on April 4 next, at which her Excellency the Countess of Dufferin has bindly consented to be present kindly consented to be present.

BURMA.

It is proposed to erect in Mandalay, for the use of the American Baptist Mission, a fire-proof chapel as a memorial to the late Dr. Judson, the pioneer Missionary to the Burmans. It is hoped to raise Rs. 30,000 for the purpose, of which a good beginning has been made by one of the few survivors of the converts baptised by Dr. Judson giving Rs. 3,000 Mr. F. D

Phinney, the mission treasurer in Rangoon and an American missionary in Burma, will gladly receive and forward contributions for the Judson Memorial, and it is hoped that the receipts will justify the laying the corner-stone of the building on August 9th, 1888, the one hundreth anniversary of Dr. Judson's birth.

LAST year the Government Archæologist and his staff in Burma found some very interesting works in the Upper Province in inspecting and preparing impressions of the stone inscriptions in Sagaing, Ava, Amarapura, and Mandalay. The most valuable collection of inscriptions was found in Amarapura, near what is known as the Mahamuni pagoda, whither were gathered about a century ago, during the reign of the cacophonic Sinpyumyashing, inscriptions from all parts of Burma in the Talaing, Pali, and Burmese languages. These inscriptions are of great historical interest and importance, and are curiously arranged in seven rows running from east to west, numbering 468 stone slabs, while on the west side is another cluster of 109 inscribed stones.

A SMALL party of the 4th Cavalry Hyderabad Contingent encountered a band of dacoits in the Kyoukse district on March 20. The enemy lost 11 killed, two wounded, and two prisoners. Twelveguns were captured. On our side the Resaldar-Major of the regiment was wounded. The Kyoukse district has been a good deal disturbed lately, and it is hoped that this lesson will have considered. will have a good effect. A bad dacoity has occurred to the south of the same district some fourteen miles from Wundwin, where a the same district some fourteen miles from Wundwin, where a village named Kokosu was attacked by a large band of dacoits and seven women and two men were killed. Action is being taken against this gang, which is said to be Boh Tok's. Its members have retreated into the thick jungle and low hills north of Prinzie Myo. The Northrrn Shan column has returned to Mandalay and now breaks up. Fifty rifles of the 42nd Gurkas are to remain temporarily at Thibaw as an escort to Mr. Daly, Political Officer. The 100 Gurkhas of the 43rd return to Assam via Calcutta. The political results of the work done by this column are very satisfactory. The latest news of the Southern Shan column was from Maingye, dated March 6. THE LIGHTING AND WIDENING OF THE SUEZ CANAL.

In an article on the above subject The Times says :been felt that the Suez Canal as originally constructed no longer responds to the constant and ever-increasing requirements of commerce and navigation. This fact was fully recognised by the International Commission which assembled in 1885, and this recognition led to the adoption by the Canal Company of two resolutions with the view of increasing the working capacity of the Canal. In the first place it was resolved to double its width and to increase its depth; and in the second to take such steps as should be necessary in order to place it was resolved to double its width and to increase its depth; and in the second to take such steps as should be necessary in order to enable ships properly equipped to make the passage of the Canal by night. With regard to the lighting the management have formulated a scheme which embraces firstly, the lighting of the Canal itself throughout its entire length with such lights as will enable vessels to keep their proper course with certailty; and, secondly, in having all ships navigating the Canal by night provided with such a system of electric lighting as shall meet with the approval of the Canal Company. By these means the navigation of the Suez Canal will be rendered possible during the whole twenty-four hours, thus doubling its commercial carrying capacity. After careful deliberation, and an examination of the various systems of lighting extant, it was decided to use compressed oil-gas, and to adopt floating buoys and beacons fixed on standards. Of these lights—which will be of two kinds and three colours—one kind will be so placed as to enable vessels steering by them to keep strictly in the centre of the channel in the straight reaches of the Canal. These are termed leading lights, and they will have a carrying power of from six to eight nautical miles—that is to say, they will be usefully discernible by vessels at about those distances. The second kind will enable ships steering by them to keep in sufficiently deep water when passing through the curved reaches of the Canal and the lakes to keep nearly to the centre of the channel. They will be placed on alternate sides of the channel and equi-distant from its centre, the passage-way between them being about 20 mètres in width. These lights, in contradistinction to the others, are termed channel lights, and vessels will be sure of keeping the right course when passing at a certain defined distance from these lights. To avoid confusion these various lights will, as we have stated, be differently coloured. The leading lights will all be white, while when passing at a certain defined distance from these lights. To avoid confusion these various lights will, as we have stated, be differently coloured. The leading lights will all be white, while the channel lights will be green on the Asiatic and red on the African side of the Canal. It is expected that the whole system will be complete and in working order about the end of next September.

Steamers will be allowed by the regulations for the night passage to proceed under the same conditions as those laid down for the traffic by day, but with cortain additional asymptometrs. In the first place by day, but with certain additional arrangements. In the first place, they must show to the satisfaction of the officials of the Canal Company, either at Port Said or at Port Tewfik, that they are provided with an electric projection at the stem or fore part of the vessel capable of throwing a light for 1,200 metres. They must also have an electric light with a shade suspended over the deck, and capable of illuminating a circular field about 200 metres in diameter.

The dredgers of the company, when at work, are to be guided by special instructions and to be signalled by means of a whistle. They are also required to extinguish all electric lights when lying at the sidings. By the aid of the arrangements we have described the commercial capacity of the canal will be practically doubled, and this will doubtless meet the requirements of the case for some time to come. It may be, however, that, sooner than we think for, additional accommodation will be required. The company will then proceed to carry out their resolve to double the width and increase the depth of the canal, and will earn the thanks of the mercantile community of the

Sir John Coode, writing to The Times as one of the representatives Sir John Coode, writing to The Times as one of the representatives of Great Britain on the International Commission, and alluding to the statement that it is the intention of the company to "double the width and increase the depth of the canal," says:—"It should, I think, be more generally known than appears to be the case that the recommendation made by the International Commission, and accepted by the Canal Company, was as follows:—Between Port Said and the Bitter Lakes the straight portions of the Canal are to be ultimately widened to 65 mètres instead of 22 mètres as at present. In the straight portions between the Bitter Lakes and Suez the Canal is to straight portions between the Bitter Lakes and Suez the Canal is to be ultimately widened to 75 metres, the widths being measured at the level of 8 metres below low water, that being the bottom of the Canal in 1885. As regards the deepening, I have good authority for stating that the first instalment—viz., to 8½ mètres—is expected to be completed for fully one-half the length of the Canal by the end of the present year, and that the entire length will be deepened to that extent by the middle of 1889."

OPIUM PROSPECTS.

OPIUM PROSPECTS.

The Englishman says:—The proceeds of the sale of provision opium on March 1 amounted to Rs. 49,47,958, a sum which is less by Rs. 1,22,150 than the yield on Feb. 1. The results of the next sale will probably be even less satisfactory. This state of things is due to the increased consumption of local opium in China, as well as to the marked preference shown of late by the Chinese for Persian opium. Government might do well to increase gradually the annual quantity of opium offered for sale and export to China in proportion to the increase in stock. For the past two years the quantity offered has been maintained at 57,000 chests, although a large reserve stock had accumulated. The cheaper the price of Indian opium, the greater the stability of the opium revenue. The opium sold in the first seven or eight months of the year, which is the opium held in reserve from the previous year, loses greatly in weight and quality. Preference is given to the new opium fresh from the manufacturer's hand, and to the strong scented Persian opium, which is taken to China while it retains its strength and aroma to the fullest extent. On this ground along therefore, it is a mistake to go on adding to the reserve stock when it can be avoided. The present reserve stock is equal to half a year's produce. Were the sales for 1889 increased in the Budget to 57,000, there might be a temporary fall in price, but the result would in the only he favourable to the revenue as well as to our continued held over there might be a temporary fall in price, but the result would in the end be favourable to the revenue, as well as to our continued hold over the China markets.

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE.—The characteristics of mind that bring men to the front in the administration of India are very unlike those that operate to produce a similar result in public affairs at home, and whether old acquaintances in this country welcome the fact or not, Sir Roper is getting to be listened to in the House more willingly than other men who would nowhere have been holded by Angle Indian emission. would perhaps have been backed by Anglo-Indian opinion in the beginning at shorter odds. Sir Roper shows that he would know how to select weak places in the armour of the Indian Government if he were organising a regular attack. The catalogue is worth observation. Sir Roper makes up his representative bouquet of Indian grievances, which might claim the attention of a Royal Commission, of the following flowers. The arrangement by which the Indian Telegraph Department has a "nest of drones" in London while its real work is done in such places as Karachi and the Persian Gulf. NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW.*

"Nothing can be more sincerely benevolent than the elings of the Indian Government towards its subjects. "Nothing can be more sincerely benevolent than the feelings of the Indian Government towards its subjects. Practical Englishmen are willing to take its benevolence for granted, but are none the less anxious to be certain that its finance is judicious and its solvency assured." These words are the raison d'être of the well-written article on "The Finances of India," to which, in consideration of the importance of the subject, precedence has been given in the present issue of the Asiatic Quarterly. Its writer, Mr. H. S. Cunningham, a well-known judge of the Calcutta High Court, derides the fiction commonly put forward by the ignorant, that India under British rule is overtaxed. "Under the greatest of the Moghuls the burden of taxation was prothe greatest of the Moghuls the burden of taxation was probably three times as heavy as at present. . . The gross value of the crops in India is now estimated to be between four and five millions sterling. Of this the British Government takes one-twentieth, or twenty-two and a-half millions. Akbar, who claimed one third, as his right, would, in similar circumstances, have assessed his land revenue at 133 millions. Yet in the most prosperous province of India, Bengal, we have tied our own hands, and rendered an increased Land Revenue, however justly claimable, impossible by a "Permanent Settlement." Indeed, it cannot be maintained that Indian Finance is in any respect on a satisfactory basis.
"The moneyed classes contribute an inequitably small share "The moneyed classes contribute an inequitably small share towards meeting the expenses of the administration under which their wealth is earned and enjoyed in security." The income tax "is grossly inadequate," as well as being most anomalous in its incidence. "The margin in the expenditure of the Government which admits of further retrenchment" is extremely small; so is "the area of taxation, and, consequently, the proportion of its income which the Government can influence." The fall in value of the rupee, which has pressed, and still presses, so hardly on the employés of the Government, falls heavily on the Exchequer also; and the surplus, if any, shown on the State balance-sheet is scanty, and, too often, illusory. "Any further fall in silver and opium, any famine expenditure, any special military expenditure, may any day sweep it away." Both Mr. Justice Cunningham and Sir R. Lethbridge, who contributes a paper on "The Proposed Inquiry into Indian Administration," remark, we believe most justly, on the Home charges. The War Office never loses an opportunity of laying unfair burdens on the Indian Exchequer. Indian Secretaries of State are too ignorant, or too weak, to protest; and to quote Sir J. Strachey, "The Proposed Inquiry into Indian Administration," remark, we believe most justly, on the Home charges. The War the Indian Exchequer. Indian Secretaries of State are too ignorant, or too weak, to protest; and to quote Sir J. Strachey, "when the interests of both English and Indian taxpayers are at stake, India has received but a scant measure of justice." The arrangements, too, under which the India Office procures military stores, have been the subject of serious complaint; "most flagrant extravagance, if not corruption, in these charges" being, it would seem, alleged—(p. 285). There is, it must be admitted, much force in Sir R. Lethbridge's objection to any inquiry by a committee in London consisting of thirty to any inquiry by a committee in London, consisting of thirty members, of whom five-sixths were, or had been, officials, as was proposed by the fainéant Administration of Mr. Gladatone—(p. 280). The writer instances many matters (and might have indicated many more) in which "fearless, independent inquiry" would probably lead to wholesome reform. Into these we need not follow him, but we can at least hope that who to work the inquiry may assume the members of Into these we need not follow him, but we can at least hope that, whatever form the inquiry may assume, the members of the Commission will be men who will not be led astray by that "fatal fluency" of the Babú class which so thoroughly "bamboozled" weak minds like those of Mr. S. Smith and Mr. Wilfrid Blunt." Of the real value of the protestations of these "societies," which, representing hungry Babúdom, claim to speak on behalf of the "People of India," a delicious instance is given in a subsequent article, "On the Report of the Public Service Commission," by Dr. G. W. Leitner. "In the Punjab," he tells us, "an inquiry into the noisiest of these societies showed that it was composed of twenty-one members, of whom seven were Bengalis, eleven schoolboys, and three. of whom seven were Bengalis, eleven schoolboys, and three, easy-going men, not holding any particular opinion. Few of them paid their monthly subscription of four annas, then equivalent to sixpence. Yet this society figures prominently as giving the opinion of the Punjab on the notorious Ilbert Bill." This same article shows (as might, indeed, have been expected from a writer of so much experience) Dr. Leitner's entire concurrence in the opinion which we have so often expressed, that, in our worship of the fetish yelept Competition, we have "neglected weightier matters." We have set up the great goddess "Book-learning," as did the Ephesians their Diana, forgetful that "book-learning" no more implies ability to rule than did the worship of of whom seven were Bengalis, eleven schoolboys, and three ing" no more implies ability to rule than did the worship of the chaste Diana imply purity on the part of the inhabitants of one of the most licentious cities of licentious Ionia. The Civil Service Commission cannot ensure that their selected prize-winner shall be a born gentleman. Nor, indeed, does the Commission pretend to do so. Yet this is an important, if not an essential, qualification for the post of a ruler of men. As Dr. Leitner very wisely remarks—and, though he is speaking of Natives, his remarks are assuredly not less applicable to Europeans, who, as he admits, must ot necessity hold the higher posts—"These men" (the officials) "should be gentlemen by birth. No competitive examination, that is not preceded by nomination, will secure that result." And we need not tell our readers that no one is quicker than a Native gentleman to distinguish between his English compeer and a man whose appointment to the Indian Civil Service rests solely on his knowledge of the Differential Calculus, or on his supposed acquaintance with the obscure passages of the Supplices of Æschylus. As regards "the departments that represent civilisation and scientific progress," by which Dr. Leitner seems to mean Public Works, Railways, and Telegraphs, we are disposed to concur in his opinion, that Natives should be more generally employed in the higher posts. more generally employed in the higher posts.

The conquest of Upper Burma brought our Indian Empire, The conquest of Upper Burma brought our Indian Empire, for the first time, into direct territorial contact with China, whose Emperor, it will be remembered, claimed the Burmese King as a vassal, on the ground of a periodical interchange of presents, in which the Burmese acted on the principle that it is more blessed to give than to receive. It is well to bear in mind that China claims a somewhat similar suzerainty over all the States on our North-Eastern Frontier. Whether her influence over them is really exercised in such a way as to influence over them is really exercised in such a way as to facilitate intercourse, commercial or other, may well be doubted. Her request for the withdrawal of the proposed "Macaulay mission" was significant, whether as to her will, or as to her power, to exercise authority in Tibet. China seems inclined to along all the advantages while reproductive all the to claim all the advantages, while repudiating all the responsibilities, of sovereignty; and it may be thought scarcely compatible with the duties of the Government of India to acquiesce sibilities, of sovereignty; and it may be thought scarcely compatible with the duties of the Government of India to acquiesce in claims which, unless shadowy, impose on the Suzerain Power the obligation of exercising some kind of control over its so called vassals. On this and cognate questions Mr. Boulger, than whom no one can write with greater authority, contributes a valuable Essay. Dealing primarily with the Chinese rights over Nipal, Bhotan, and Sikkim, he urges that it may be good policy "to induce the Chinese to waive . . . valueless possessions in return for some tangible equivalent," though, as it rightly observes, we should never think of "recognising any Chinese claims over territory south of the Himalayas." Chinese claims on Kashmir, or, rather, on Ladak, are extremely vague. At present they are in abeyance; but stranger things have happened in history than their possible sale by China to Russia. "It would," says Mr. Boulger, "be folly to overlook the enormous temptation to a great general to make a dash on it (Kashmir) despite Nature's obstacles, and thus to gain the rear of our main defences" at Kandahar or on the Suleiman. But the purchase of even imaginary Chinese rights would give the Russians a far better nominal right to appear in the territory as Suzerains than they had either at Merv or at Penjdeh. While we have to keep a watchful eye on possible Russian intrigues, we must not neglect those French machinations, of the reality of which in Burma so much proof was obtained at the capture of Thebaw's palace. Mr. Holt Hallett, in his important Paper on "France and England in Eastern Asia," points out most clearly the enormous value of the trade of South-Western China, which will infallibly fall into French hands if we make no effort to secure it. Messrs. Colquhoun and Hallett have long and consistently advocated the construction, in combination with the friendly Ruler of Siam, of a railway line starting from Maulmain, which would certainly give to British capitalists the control of this most im

Want of space prevents our commenting at length on Mr. F. C. THROUGH THE YANG-TSE GORGES.*

That the Celestials are an extraordinary people has long been known—their unwearying industry, their patient sub-mission, their economical habits, their teeming myriads must ever stamp them with an individuality entirely their own. Nor will Mr. Little's very fascinating volume fail to confirm the preconceived notions of the public at large in regard to the the preconceived notions of the public at large in regard to the habits and ways of this most remarkable portion of creation. A few random examples will serve to show somewhat of the oddities of this most odd of races. The "tow-paths" along the banks of the rivers are so bad and out of repair that to an ordinary traveller they are not only difficult, but at times dangerous. Yet, withal, the "coolies" journey along them unconcerned and undistressed, having a tow rope round their loins and a huge "junk" to pull against a current of considerable activity, and all this fearful, arduous labour is performed willingly and cheerfully for a handful of rice and a few pence able activity, and all this fearful, arduous labour is performed willingly and cheerfully for a handful of rice and a few pence per diem! No wonder this "cheapness" is reflected in the hotel bills, which amount on an average to about sixpence a day. And, indeed, it is well that this should be the case, for the current coin which goes by the name of "cash" is so heavy that a shilling's worth weighs a pound and a-half. This excessive unsuitability of Chinese money to the requirements of ordinary civilisation necessitates the profession of "pursebearer," the sole duty being to carry and disburse the sums spent by the master in his daily shopping.

It were easy to cull passage after passage from Mr. Little's narrative indicating the various peculiarities of the people, but limit of space must confine the selection to two matters.

but limit of space must confine the selection to two matters. First, as regards opium. We are told that during a twenty-five years' stay in the country the writer never met one single person seriously injured by the drug. The harm—and that is bad enough—is the impoverishment which such a comparatively expensive luxury inflicts upon the families of bread-winners, whose weekly earnings are reckoned by pence rather. than pounds, and whose income is barely sufficient to keep body and soul together. As regards Christianity, it would appear that absolutely no progress at all is made in winning the hearts of the followers of Confucius. Conversion is a dead letter—an unknown factor. Missionaries are tolerated, and barely that; but not a Celestial but what laughs in his aleeve, or, worse still, mutters imprecations through his teeth upon the hated foreigner, who seeks to turn the land of pig-tails into an arena of religious strife and pious warfare. Alas! what does Exeter Hall say to these stern facts? The comment on this narrative of travel must be short, but

The comment on this narrative of travel must be short, but it must also be decisive. Speaking the language, and familiar with the customs of the people, Mr. Little had unusual advantages of "pioneering" amidst this little known people. He turned his opportunities to good account, and has presented to the world the most readable and explanatory volume which, so far as we know, has ever been published regarding the unsung Celestials in the land of spirits, dragons, and fiery moneters of the circ monsters of the air.

THE HISTORY OF PORTUGAL.

THE HISTORY OF PORTUGAL.†

Portugal! What a glorious past of splendid memories is recalled by the bare mention of the name of this "brave little" nation! As pioneers and discoverers they stand first and foremost in the history of the world. To them civilisation over the possession of the "Australias, Africa, and a great part of America." They were the founders of a mighty Empire in the New World. Africa was colonised by them, and their possessions in the East date from a period antecedent to the time when England laid the basis of that mighty sway which culminated in the proclamation of the assumption by the Queen of the proud title of Empress of India. Yet, as Mr. M'Murdo truly remarks, who, "even amongst scholars," knows the barest outline of Portuguese history? Who could tell the leading features of this country, with its wonderful career, its proud successes, its unparalleled decline! The reason is not far to seek. No history exists of the Kingdom of the Braganzas, at least in a comtory exists of the Kingdom of the Braganzas, at least in a complete and trustworthy form. This defect is now in a fair way of being remedied. Our author has stepped into the breach, and presented to the public a summary of national events, present the state of the property of the state of the public as the property of the state of the public as the p pared from records available at Lisbon. These apparently have been translated by Miss Mariana Monteiro, and the sult woven into a connected and readable narrative by Mr. M'Murdo.

The present volume brings the history from A.D. 1097 to A.D. 1279, a period of no more than 200 years, but nevertheless an epoch of transcendent importance; for during these eventful years a nation arose from the ashes of plunder, rapine, and conquest—a nation which even now, albeit shorn of much o its former splendour, can boast of an aggregate of 30,000,000 souls which bow the knee to the Sovereign of the House of

The story is by no means void of interest; indeed, the rise of a mighty Empire can never be altogether wanting in attraction; but the work is, of course, not of a nature to be taken up at random in place of a three-volume novel. It is rather a book to be studied and carefully cogitated, as throwing light upon a little-known chapter of the world's history. At every page there is evidence of care and diligence, and Mr. M'Murdomay be congratulated upon the preparation of the fullest and most complete account of the Portuguese nation which has yet appeared. The labour involved must have been enormous, and the reward should be the thanks of all who appreciate diligent research and laborious toil.

THE BRITISH ARMY.*

The raison d'être of Major Lawrence-Archer's extremely valuable work is to furnish an epitome of the history of the various regiments of the British Army. Up to the present time, so far as we know, no compilation has been prepared embracing an account of all the regiments. Cannon's extensive series is, of course, most admirable in its way, but it is not complete to date, and it is cumbersome; while isolated narratives with reference to isolated regiments obviously do not serve the purpose of a general work of reference. serve the purpose of a general work of reference. The present volume supplies, therefore, a much-needed want; in design and execution it leaves absolutely nothing to be desired. Each regiment is treated seriatim. First there is a picture of the standard, the badge, or the device, as the case may be; then follows an historical account of the formation of the regiment, follows an historical account of the formation of the regiment, its history, its battles, its leading officers, its facings, &c. Indeed, every detail is given, and so precise and close is the information that it would scarcely be possible to add to the stock. Nor is the work a mere book for reference. Viewed merely as an interesting narrative, it by no means should be allowed to pass without a word of praise. Every Englishman is, or should be, proud of the National Army, and it cannot be otherwise than matter of moment to freshen the memory with an account of deeds of daring which will live in the pages of history as long as the "sun and moon endure." The thousand and one records of bravery which built up the British Empire may well be read and re-read, and to no better source could reference be made than to Major Lawrence-Archer's "British Army," which stamps the author as a careful historian, a pains Army," which stamps the author as a careful historian, a pains taking writer, and a trustworthy annalist of England's proudest annals.

AID TO RUSSIAN COMPOSITION.†

Mr. Nestor-Schnurmann's "Aid to Russian Composition," which is evidently intended as a sequence to his manual of the same language, adopts the scheme for which we have always contended, that attempts should be made to learn grammar by the light of composition rather than composition by the light of grammar. Accordingly, he puts his sentences for translation first, and then proceeds to explain the rules which should guide the student. More than this, even when dealing with syntax, he avoids the time-honoured arrangement of matters, and opens the campaign with the parts of speech classified according to order of importance. First the verb, of matters, and opens the campaign with the parts of speech classified according to order of importance. First the verb, then the substantive, after which the adjective, and so on. This is plain common sense—it is nature's method. Children learn first of all to speak their mother tongue, which done, they study the "whys and wherefores"; and should not adults follow the same homely example?

We have every confidence that Mr. Nestor-Schnurmann has adopted a wise course in his present volume and trust that adopted a wise course in his present volume, and trust that success may attend his efforts to popularise the study of a language which must, of necessity, play an important part in the history of the world.

TAYLER OF PATNA.

Nothing could have been more unsatisfactory than Sir J. Gorst's reply to Mr. Labouchere on Thursday last regarding the case of Mr. William Taylor, of Patna. It may be a matter of regret that such a case should have been confided for its advocacy into the hands of the senior member for Northampton; for the House, in its present humour, unfortunately is opinion that the honourable member is never in a serious mood concerning any matter which he takes in hand. Besides, he is very ignorant on all subjects connected with India. It is, therefore, somewhat of a puzzle to understand why he should have troubled himself about the case of Mr. William Tayler, formerly Commissioner of Patna. But having done so he drew from Sir J. Gorst a reply which, as we have said, is a most unsatisfactory one. The statement of Sir J. Gorst is to the following effect:-" The case of Mr. W. Taylor was first investigated and decided by the First Secretary of State for India, the Earl of Derby (then Lord Stanley) in 1859. His decision was to confirm the action of the Government of India and the Court of Directors for reasons fully set forth in a despatch, dated June 1st, 1859, which has been presented to Parliament."

This is the ordinary kind of official reply, and no doubt Lord Stanley recorded his decision as indicated. But decisions of the Secretaries of State for India are surely not, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, irrevocable for ever. Lord Stanley wrote immediately after the close of the mutiny, and at a time when passion and prejudice were, perhaps, at their highest. Sir F. Halliday was then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and of course had considerable influence over Lord Canning-a new and untried man in all affairs of State concerning India. Sir F. Halliday did not wish to believe that the Bengal Army had really mutinied, and that the British rule in India was dangerously imperilled. He wrote Minutes with milk on rose leaves, and for a time he completely humbugged Lord Canning into the belief that there was nothing serious to be apprehended. The worst adviser which the Governor-General had at that time of trouble and distres was Sir Frederick Halliday. His narrow-mindedness, his prejudices, his absolute incapacity for grasping great questions in an enlightened way, were well known in Bengal at the time. We do not now care to remind our readers of the sneers and sarcasms which were then prevalent against the ruler at Belvidere, but many Anglo-Indians alive to-day must still The "Red Pamphlet" is unforturemember them. nately out of print, but in the brilliant pages of that work Sir F. Halliday's character was sketched in the most truthful, if not in the most flattering, way. Weak in every direction in which a Governor ought to have been strong, he has yet been powerful enough to prevent justice being done to his former subordinate, William Tayler, of Patna. During his long tenure of office at the Indian Council Board, to which Sir F. Halliday clung like a limpet to a rock, he has been a stumbling. block in the way of allowing a great wrong to be righted. In the dark days of 1857 in India many blunders were committed-many foolish things were said and done in the name of authority. But there were men who were courageous enough to have acknowledged having erred, and to have done wrong even in the conscientious endeavour to do right. Sir Frederick Halliday has not, however, been one of these. Like the Bourbons of France, he has forgotten nothing and learnt nothing, even by the lessons of misfortune. And he has forgiven nothing either. In a late issue of the St. James's Gazette he finds an advocate who puts the case of William Taylor in this very simple way-that were justice done to the ex-Commissioner of Patna, blame would lie against the ex-Governor of Bengal! Let this be admitted, but ought truth and justice to be ignored because such a result might follow? The writer in the St. James's Gazette presumes to say that Lord Canning's reputation would suffer also. Not at all. Lord Canning was misled when in Council he passed the censure on Tayler. This his lordship's private secretary acknowledged when he wrote to Mr. Taylor that he had "a very sincere conviction that if Lord Canning had seen the papers which you now have to produce, and been made acquainted with the subsequent progress of events, he would most likely have changed his opinion as to the treatment you have experienced, and if he had changed his opinion a man of his noble character would have been forward to say so and to do you justice." This altogether disposes of the difficulty of attaching blame to the memory of Lord Canning. It is unfortunate, however, that it is not to the dead but to the living that app eal must in this case be made for justice to a deeply-wrong ed and injured man.

HOUSE OF COMMONS .-- APRIL 10.

THE CASE OF MR. WILLIAM TAYLER.

SIR R. LETHBRIDGE asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether the attention of Her Majesty's Government had been directed to the statement of the case of Mr. William Tayler, formerly Commissioner of Patna, published in the Times of April 6; whether it was true that Mr. Tayler's petition "disappeared" from the India Office at some date between 1989 and 1979, whether are investigated by tween 1868 and 1878; whether any inquiry had been made as to the circumstances of such disappearance, and, if so, whether the results of that inquiry would be laid upon the table of the House; and whether Her Majesty's Government would take any steps to insure that substantial justice be done in Mr.

Tayler's case.
Sir J. Gorst.—The statements made in The Times of April 6th have during the last thirty years been repeatedly brought to the attention of successive Secretaries of State. The original petition was lost between 1868 and 1878, but copies are extant and have been laid before Parliament. There is no reason to suppose that the loss was anything but one of those accidents suppose that the loss was anything but one of those accidents which sometime occur in the best regulated departments, and no further inquiry is, in the judgment of the Secretary of State, necessary. The Secretary of State is not willing to constitute himself a Court of Appeal against the uniform decision of his predecessors during so long a period.

Sir R. Lethbridge subsequently gave notice that he would call attention to this case on the earliest opportunity.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Under-Secretary for India whether the Estimates of the Indian Budget were likely to be seriously disturbed by the rates at which the Secretary of State was now disposing of bills and transfers; and, if so, what would be the amount of the further deficit for the year at the present rate of exchange.

Sir J. Fergusson.-The average rates for 1887-88 was 16.898d. per rupee; the Budget rate is 16.9d.; and last week's rate 16.4d. It is, however, impossible to judge from the sale of bills for a single week what will be the average rate of exchange for the year, and whether the Estimates will be seriously disturbed—(hear, hear).

APRIL 13.

THE ROYAL ARTILLERY IN INDIA.

Sir H. HAVELOCK-ALLAN asked the Secretary for War

whether his attention had been called to a statement which had appeared recently in an Indian newspaper, alleging that the whole Royal Artillery in India, both horse and field, were still only armed with the obsolete 9-pounder field gun; whether that statement was correct, and, if so, how far; whether he could hold out to the House any hopes that that that of things would be amended at an early date; and state of things would be amended at an early date; and whether he could, with due regard to public expediency, indicate to the House any approximate date at which our Artillery in India might be expected to be put into a state of efficiency for field service by being armed with a more modern field

Sir J. Gorst.—Three batteries armed with 2-pounder breechloading field guns have been sent to India, and six more will be sent this year. The time within which the new guns can be supplied to the whole of the batteries in India depends, as I explained on May 23, 1887, on financial and other considerations—(hear, hear).

Siderations—(near, near).

Sir H. Havelock-Allan gave notice that, inasmuch as he regarded the answer given by the right hon. gentleman as not wholly satisfactory, he should, if the matter were not settled in the meantime, call attention to it on the Indian Budget.

THE CASE OF MR. W. TAYLER.

Mr. Labouchere asked the Under-Secretary of State for India whether the case of Mr. William Tayler, formerly Commissioner of Patna, had ever been investigated and decided by any Secretary of State for India; and whether any investigation of the case had ever been completed, or any decision made upon it.

Sir J. Gorst. The case of Mr. W. Tayler was first investigated and decided by the First Secretary of State for India, the Earl of Derby (then Lord Stanley), in 1859. His decision was to confirm the action of the Government of India and the Court of Directors, for reasons fully set forth in a despatch, dated June 1, 1859, which has been presented to Parliament. The communications between Mr. Tayler and Sir S. Northcote in 1867 are not recorded in the India Office. It appears, from Mr. Tayler's memorial to the Secretary of State of Oct. 13, 1868, that what Mr. Tayler originally asked Sir S. Northcote for was "a public and suitable recognition of his services." It is the practice of the India Office that all applications for honours are dealt with by the Secretary of State personally. honours are dealt with by the Secretary of State personally. There is no ground for the supposition that the Duke of Argyll neglected to investigate the case or recorded an adverse opinion without due inquiry into the merits. The case has been investigated and decided by every subsequent Secretary The grounds of their decisions have been generally that no facts or arguments were adduced to render it right, in their judgment, to reverse the decision of Lord Stanley in 1859, or those of their subsequent predecessors in office.

HONORARY SURGEONS TO THE VICEROY.

HUNTER asked the Secretary of State for India whether honorary surgeons to the Viceroy of India had been prohibited wearing the aiguilette heretofore used by them. Sir J. Gorst.—Under the dress regulations of the Army, honorary surgeons to the Viceroy have no authority to wear such a decoration. If they have been in the habit of so doing, it has been an irregularity.

THE NEW DOCK AT BOMBAY.

In answer to Admiral FIELD, Lord G. Hamilton said,—I can assure the hon gentleman that the Admiralty are fully alive to the importance of bringing the negotiations on the subject of the proposed navy dock at Bombay to a termination, and with this object it has been agreed that a conference shall be held as soon as can be agreed that a conference snall be nead as soon as can be arranged between representatives of the department concerned, the difference being not as to the necessity for a dock, but as to its dimensions, the navy requiring a depth and width in excess of commercial wants. The extra requirements of the Navy entail a large additional expenditure, and the apportionment of that outlay is not easy of adjustment. The honment of that outlay is not easy of adjustment. The hon. and gallant gentleman suggests that the question be referred to a naval member of Parliament, and though I am much obliged for this kindly offer of personal assistance, as the decision involves expenditure and taxation it must be left to those who are personally responsible for such matters-(laughter).

OFFICIAL intelligence says that Lieut. Hunter, with 100 rifles, 10th Bengal Infantry, surprised the camp of Shwegyobyn Prince, in the region between the Chindwin and South Pagyi, by marching through unfrequented mountain paths; he captured 45 dacoits, 127 guns, 71 dahs, 45 head of cattle belonging to the Prince, and a large quantity of ammunition and paddy. The Prince and his two lieutenants narrowly escaped appropriate and have fled towards. Missing It is reported that capture, and have fled towards Mingin. It is reported that the gang has been broken up, and that order has been com-pletely restored in that part of the country.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE services of Lieut G. Mellis, 8th Bombay Infantry, have been placed at the disposal of the Government for employment in the Civil Department.

MAJOR JOHN DE BURGH LYNCH, S.C., having completed twenty-six years' service, has been promoted to be a Lieut. Colonel.

LIEUT. SCROPE DOIG has been promoted to be a Captain in the B.B. and C.I. Railway Volunteer Rifle Corps; and Volunteer Thomas Matheson has been appointed to be Honorary Captain and Paymaster in the Sind Volunteer Rifle Corps.

MAJOR-GENERAL ROWLANDS, Commanding the Bangalore Division, inspected the Bangalore Rifle Volunteers on March 25th. After their being put through various manœuvres the General addressed the corps. He said he regretted that the non-commissioned officers, with but few exceptions, had not displayed the interpretable of the said here. displayed the intelligence on this parade that their rank demanded. If, owing to their employments, or business engagements, they could not attend parades regularly, they might, at very little sacrifice at home, study what is not only expected but required of them as regarded their knowledge of duties as guides and markers. There were now simple and cheap models made and sold which with the experies of only company intelligence. made and sold which, with the exercise of only common intelli-gence, may enable any man to study to become master of all the military movements required at the present day. The General hoped that all ranks would endeavour to understand the importance of the Volunteer movement to the nation at large. Peace, he said, they all desired, but the sound of the tocsin of war was not far distant. At light infantry movements, and more especially in executing the attack-formation, the General found the Bangalere Volunteers meet intelligent the General found the Bangalore Volunteers most intelligent and attentive. There was that dash and activity displayed in their movements which is so assuring under fire. The corps was now looked upon as an old one, and the General was sure that if its services should ever be required it would not be found wanting in efficiency or discipline.

Movement of Troops.—On the arrival at Bombay of the 25th Bombay Light Infantry from Burma on or about the 13th April, the Regiment will be despatched by rail—head-quarters and five companies to Neemuch and three companies to Indore. The Depôt is to be moved from Malegaon to Neemuch after the arrival of the Regiment at destinations. The 5th Bombay Light Infantry on arrival at Bombay from Burma, on or about the 30th April, is to be despatched by rail to Baroda, dropping two companies at Surat. The two companies of the 28th Bombay Infantry at Surat and the Company at Baroda will, on relief by the above, be moved by rail to Poona to rejoin headquarters at New Jhansi. The 23rd Bombay Light Infantry on arrival at Bombay from Burma, on or about the 16th May, will be despatched by rail to Munmad for Malegaon, and the Depôt will be moved from Neemuch to Malegaon after the arrival of the 25th Bombay Infantry at the former station.

THE GRAVE OF AN EASTERN WORTHY.

Readers of either of the two excellent biographies of Rajah Sir James Brooke will remember that the last years of this great man were passed in the little village of Sheepstor, on the borders of Dartmoor, in Devonshire; that here he lived, except for two visits to Sarawak, for ten years, and that here he died and was buried. In the course of his wanderings from place to place along the south coast in the year 1859, in search of health and quiet, "uncertain as to his future," says Miss Jacob, "but feeling keenly the want of a place he could really call home," he heard that a small house called Burrator, with an estate of about seventy acres, was for sale, and he soon purchased it.

No one who has ever visited Dartmoor is likely to forget the wild and rugged aspect of the moor itself, with its total lack of cultivation and its huge masses of granite piled into fantastic shapes, with here and there an appearance of arrangement which has led many to believe that these tors, as they are called, are the work of pre-historic man. Descending in any direction from the moor, one comes on delightful combes or valleys, where the vegetation, sheltered from the rude wind which blows above, and well watered by the streams which rise on the moor—is almost tropical in its luxuriance. One of the most beautiful of all these is the winding Meavy valley, which opens on the lowlands between Plymouth and Tavistock, not far from the estuary of the Tary and Tamar. Where the valley slopes up to the moor, and not far from the top, is the little village of Sheepstor. Above, all is wildness and barrenness; below, the most delightful of English vegetation, in quite un-English profusion. Far down in the valley is the village of Meavy, with its pretty church, and the leet from the moor which supplies Plymouth with water running through it. Burrator stands a short distance from the banks of a little stream flowing down from Dartmoor, which at this point descends over small cascades, and in and out through rocks, placed in infinite variety by t who desired to avoid the worst of the bleak winds. who desired to avoid the worst of the bleak winds. The house is a modest but very substantial building, as all the house about the moor, and indeed in the rural districts of Devon, generally are. It is at present the property of Sir Massey Lopes, who purchased it from the Rajah's successor. The house is, therefore, well taken care of, though looking somewhat dreary and deserted. From the out offices it is apparent that Sir James Brooke was not extravalent in the restore of house and carriages for there is but one care. the out offices it is apparent that Sir James Brooke was not extravagant in the matter of horses and carriages, for there is but one small coach-house and a stable of very modest dimensions. The small farm attached to the house appeared to be composed of the stubborn and thankless soil peculiar to the higher regions of the moor, but in the immediate vicinity of the house, whether because of more cultivation, or that it was naturally better, it exhibited more vegetation.

It is impossible to describe the attraction and loueliness of this spot. Brooke himself said that he lived "in a solitude the like of which is not to be found in Sarawak excepting upon Peninjan;" but loved the Brooke himself said that he lived "in a solitude the like of which is not to be found in Sarawak, excepting upon Peninjau," but loved the place with all the love he had for any place out of Sarawak. On one occasion he wrote to his nephew, the present Rajah, who had been urging him apparently, to live in some more lively place, that he would not be written out of Burrator, for he was far from being mopish; he was, he said, "quiet; mind at rest, and busy with small matters;" busy, in his new Sarawak, as he called it, making all around him as happy as he could; he "grew wise in the high and mighty matters of manure and crops;" he became a churchwarden, and mingled in parish duties with the simple and kindly moorland farmers. He found the church almost a ruin, and with his usual energy set to work to get the sid of his friends to and with his usual energy set to work to get the aid of his friends to restore it.

At present there is not much to be seen at Burrator to remind one At present there is not much to be seen at Burrator to remini one of the great Rajah, except the cascades already mentioned, and a few canes artistically planted. But a few hundred yards off at Sheepstor, or Shipstor, as the inhabitants call it, there are several memorials of him. A small brass plate records the fact that he was churchwarden, and a stained-glass window, representing the exaltation of Joseph in Egypt, was put up in the church by subscription. In the north-east corner of the churchyard, and immediately under a magnificent beech, in his cases, over which has been placed as exploiding graphic corner of the churchyard, and immediately under a magnificent beech, is his grave, over which has been placed a splendid granite monument. It is altar-shaped, about ten feet long by five broad, and five feet high. On it is a simple inscription in gilt letters, which, by the way, are rather tarnished, from the damp which has collected inside the glass plate which covers them. It is as follows:—"Sacred to the Memory of Sir James Brooke, K.C.B., D.C.L., Rajah of Sarawak. Born at Bandal, Bengal, April 29, 1803. Died at his Residence, Burrator, in this parish, June 11th, 1869."

Sheepstor behind is a huge mass of porphyritic granite, from the summit of which one gets a bird's-eye view of the English home of the Rajah, and beyond it across the Vale of Bickleigh to the English Channel. The solitude, peace and beauty of the whole scene are in-

"The knights are dust,

"The knights are dust,
Their good souls rust,
Their souls are with the saints, we trust."
And in Rajah Brooke's case the great work which he did lives after him. It is right and fitting that he should have an enduring monument in the little moorland village in which he made his home; but his noblest monument, one which will outlast even Dartmoor granite, is the state of Sarawak, and its history since Rajah Brooke founded it.—London and China Telegraph.

Messrs. Wm. Jas. and Hy. Thompson's Indian Tea Circular states:
—The auctions were resumed on Monday, and supplies of both Indian and Ceylon being good, the extent of the demand has been fairly tested. and Ceylon being good, the extent of the demand has been fairly tested. The result is that all grades under 1s., except Dust, have improved in value, especially Souchongs and Brokens "for price," and it seems that dealers are short of these kinds; an advance of 1d. to 2d. has also been paid for fine Pekoes and Broken Pekoes with good make and point, and medium grades are receiving more attention, and are a little dearer. The sales closed with spirited competition at the best point. Ceylon Teas under 1s. have been keenly bid for, and are ½d. dearer, but over that, especially for Broken Pekoes, prices favour buyers, considering the excellent quality of the tea now coming forward. The March deliveries were as follows:—

1888. 7,432,000 lbs. 1,015,000 lbs. 7,151,000 lbs. 616,000 lbs. Indian Ceylon ... China, &c. ... Cevlon ••• 9,402,000 lbs. 10,464,000 lbs. • • •

Messrs. H. A. Hertz and Co.'s Indian, Coylon and Java Tea Circular reports:—Previous to Easter large sales were held on the six available days, altogether 79,180 packages being catalogued. The demand, however, proved more than equal to the quantity on offer, and prices were firm all round, Indian growths under 1s. closing at a further advance. Business was resumed on the 5th inst., when a small sale of 480 packages was held, which sold at steady prices. Since then sales have been large, but being after a fortnight's practical inactivity, buyers have been ready to absorb almost all the offerings at firm prices. buyers have been ready to absorb almost all the offerings at firm prices. Demand continues strongest for Teas for price, and Souchongs, Pekoe Souchongs, and Broken Teas show a further rise of \(\frac{1}{2} \)d. per lb. Ceylons have been largely offered, and have sold freely at firm to advancing prices, the dearth of Darjeeling Teas directing more attention to all flavory kinds, which meet with brisk competition. Java Teas have come forward in larger quantity, 6,864 having been catalogued during the month. A large proportion still showed indifferent quality in cup, and these sold slowly at low quotations, with good leaf Souchong only bringing 5\(\frac{1}{2} \)d. Per lb. There is a good demand for better grades at from 7d. to 8d., which show an improvement of \(\frac{1}{2} \)d. Lo \(\frac{3}{2} \)d. Per lb. Pekoes have been sold chiefly for export, Fine Sinagar Flowery Pekoes bringing 1s. 6\(\frac{1}{2} \)d. A considerable quantity of white tipped Pekoes sold at from 11d. to 1s. 1\(\frac{1}{2} \)d.

WITH reference to several old standing claims against the Nizam's State, as well as the debts due to the Nizam's Government by sowcars and others in Hyderabad, various Commisment by sowcars and others in Hyderabad, various Commissions have, at different times, been appointed to institute inquiries into and decide upon them. At the recommendation of the present Minister, his Highness appointed the Nawab Vikar-ul-Umra, as President of the Debt Commission, to which was also added another member. Claims of upwards of ten crores of rupees have been already preferred before the Commission. The President recently reported to the Minister that the Commission as constituted at present was unable to discharge its duties with the requisite efficiency and expeditiousness and proposed that a General Committee of about twelve members, with sub-committees to work under it, should be appointed. bers, with sub-committees to work under it, should be appointed. It was recommended that the General Committee should examine the work already done, go into the history of every one of the old claims preferred, refer to the several notifications that were at different times issued by Government on the subject, ascertain what claims had been preferred in accordance with the terms of these notifications, and report upon the result with the terms of these notifications, and report upon the result of these inquiries, stating the number and nature of the claims which were pending inquiry. It was further proposed that, on receipt of this report, Government should direct the Commission to distribute these cases for inquiry to the different sub-committees with a view to the claims being inquired into and decided upon without undue delay. This proposal of the President has just received the sanction of the Minister, who has directed that until such time as the report of the General has directed that until such time as the report of the General Committee is received, the meetings of the existing Debt Commission should be postponed.

"VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthur (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

ing between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magarine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally dodle and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a bonvenient form will be of value to fournalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its carnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for nterchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue sontains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the Fren3h, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the Gorman, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done for more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenæum Club, June 23 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sone from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.— Address of the C. in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

.... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout ts career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 6th April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 4th April; and from Calcutta to the 3rd April.

THE Vicercy left Calcutta on the 29th ult., and reached Lucknow on April 5th, where he was to remain for three SIR MACKENZIE WALLACE, who was accompanying the Viceregal party to Simla, was seized with cholera on the journey, and removed to the hospital at Allahadad, but has since recovered.

THE Viceregal party shot two tigers at Gwindghur on the 2nd inst., one of them falling to Lord Dufferin's rifle.

HEE EXCELLENCY THE COUNTESS OF DUFFERIN arrived at Agra on Saturday, the 31st March, and was received by his Highness the Maharaja of Bhurtpore, Mr. Kaye (Commissioner), Mr. Finlay, and Major Martelli (Political Agent). Her Excellency, accompanied by Ladies Helen and Hermione Blackwood and Major Cooper, were the guests of his Highness the Maharaja of Bhurtpore, who received her Excellency and drove her in his four-in-hand to his magnificently-furnished residence, Hariperbat. Lady Dufferin visited the Female Medical School, and decided upon building a new lying-in ward for the practical teaching of the female medical pupils.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL CARRE has been appointed to the command of the hill station of Jutogh, during the absence of Colonel Graham, commanding the Sikkim Expeditionary Force. A detachment from the 2nd Battalion of the Wiltshire Regiment has just arrived at Jutogh, which has never before had such a large number of troops as this year.

THE escort of the Afghan Boundary Commission were at Farrah on the 12th ult. All well.

NAZIR MUHAMMAD SARWAR KHAN, who was Governor of Herat while the Boundary Commission was on the frontier, is reported to have recently died at Kabul.

SARDAR AYUB KHAN AND HASHIM KHAN reached Bagdad on the 25th ult. Captain Evans Gordon has been appointed Political Officer in charge of the Sardar and his parties.

SIR ROBERT SANDEMAN, the Governor-General's Agent in Beluchistan, arrived at Karachi on the 30th ult. on the way to Lus Beyla.

It is reported that the late Jani Mir Khan's heir has asked the permission of the Government of India to resign his claim in favour of his eldest son.

RAJA MOTI SINGH, of Poonch, is said to have intercepted a fletter from Luchman Dass to his friend, Mean Nizamudin, lately dismissed with disgrace from the Prime Ministership of Poonch, inciting him to sedition and to the ruin of the State.

SIR CHARLES ELLIOT AND COLONEL CONWAY had a narrow escape on the Bengal-Nagpur Branch Railway. A rail had been removed, and a train just preceding theirs had nine waggons wrecked.

The death is announced of Khan Shri Babi Gazafar Khanji, of the Manawadar branch of the Bantwa State, a third-class Kathiawar Chief.

THE vacant Law Reportership in the Calcutta High Court has been filled by the appointment of Mr. Panioty, Barrister-at-Law.

The railway guard Brookes, who was charged with having committed a brutal assault on a lady travelling in a train on the North-West Railway last December, has been convicted, and sentenced by Mr. Justice Rattigan to five years' rigorous imprisonment.

THE Calcutta stewards have declined to alter the arrangements for the Calcutta meeting in order to suit the Madras meeting.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR T. BAKER has taken up command of Rawal Pindi. He is succeeded at Allahabad by Major-General Lynch.

THE Bengal Legislative Council is employed in the consideration of the new Municipal Act.

THE Kolhapur Industrial Exhibition was opened by Colonel Hunter on April 2nd.

Mr. H. S. Thomas, First Member of the Board of Revenue, has been placed on special duty to draw up a Fisheries Bill for the Madras Presidency.

Mr. Rustomjee Dhunjeebhoy Mehta has been appointed a Commissioner of the Port Trust at Calcutta. He is the first Parsee gentleman who has had this distinction conferred upon him.

SANCTION has been given to the extension of the Morvi State Railway from Vankaneer to Rajkote.

Mr. Henvey, the Resident at Jeypore, will succeed Sir Lepel Griffin as Agent to the Governor-General in Central India when the latter proceeds on furlough.

COLONEL JENKINS, the Manager of the Oudh and Rohil-kund Railway, retired from that position from March 31st. He is succeeded by Mr. Sydney Hartwell, who, however, retains the office of Traffic Manager also.

SIR CHARLES AITCHISON has reached Simla.

THE Port Commissioners of Calcutta have resolved to lease out the collection of tolls on local traffic on the-Howrah Bridge from month to month until the further orders of Government are received.

THE Chief Justice of Madras takes a month's leave this year in addition to the vacation, and goes to England.

Mr. Justice Kernan officiates.

THE Government of India have at last sanctioned a scheme for forming a Volunteer Reserve at Calcutta.

THE Presidency Volunteer Reserve Battalion will be commanded by Major R. C. Sterndale, Cantonment Magistrate, Dum Dum; and will be under the administrative control of the officer commanding the Presidency Volunteers.

Mr. J. A. Gammie, the resident Manager of the Bengal Government's Cinchona plantation, and Dr. King have succeeded in elaborating a process by which the whole of the quinine in yellow bark can be extracted in a form undistinguishable, either chemically or physically, from the best brands of European manufacture; and this can be done so cheaply that, as long as the supply of bark is keptup, quinine need never cost Government much above Rs. 25 a pound.

The Maharaja of Travancore has placed at the disposal of Sir Madhava Rew and Sir Ramasawmy Moodelliar the sum of Rs. 3,000 to be distributed among such educational and charitable institutions as in the opinion of the above gentlemen are most deserving. Raja Gajapathi Row has made a donation of Rs. 10,000 to the Monegar Choultry Hospital, Madras. Rance Gajapathi Row has also given Rs. 10,000 to the Victoria Hospital for caste and gosha women.

THE Maharaja of Kashmir is employing as his Dewan one Amar Nath, a member of the hereditary family of dewans, who is a younger brother of Anant Ram and son of Kirpa Ram, some time Minister under the late Maharaja. The management of affairs appears, however, to rest chiefly with the Maharaja's brothers, Rajas Ram Singh and Amar Singh, the other members of the State Council, which since the dismissal of Luchman Dass has ceased to exist.

SIRDAR AYUB KHAN will most probably spend the hot weather at Murree. He stipulated, when surrendering to General MacLean at Mashad, that he should be allowed to reside in the Rawal Pindi District, but just now there is a difficulty in finding accommodation for him there.

NOTES.

It is distressing to learn from the Times telegram published this morning that an epidemic of cholera of a virulent type has broken out in Calcutta, although the intelligence does not altogether take one by surprise after the reports which have for some months been making their appearance in the Anglo-Indian Press regarding the unsanitary condition of the City of Palaces under the rule of the present Municipality. The majority in that Corporation are Native gentlemen supposed to hold advanced ideas, and anxious to show that they are quite competent to manage the affairs of the town. After clamouring loudly and for a long time for more extended powers these were granted, and the result has been that Calcutta is now pronounced to be in a state of unsanitation which recalls its condition of half a century ago.

A QUARTER of a century ago the condition of the city was bad enough under European management, but when the present Sir Stuart Hogg became master of the situation, and infused some of his own indomitable energy into the body of Justices of the Peace, who were then members of the Municipality, things began to mend. There was then, as now, a great deal too much of talk at the weekly meetings, both by Natives and Europeans, but the former rather inclined to support the Chairman's views; the chief opposition came almost from the latter. But force of individual character carried the day, and when Sir Stuart Hogg retired from his arduous labours even his opponents owned that he had deserved well of his fellow-citizens. He found Calcutta a city of pestilence, he left it as healthy a city as any in Indis. But the good work he accomplished seems now being undone through the apathy or obstinacy of the Native local magnates, who look upon the question of sanitation as an English nuisance.

Lord Dufferin was a bold man in doing before he left Calcutta what no previous Viceroy had dared to do, viz, to make a personal inspection of the slums of the city. In two of the richest wards of the Native town he had to walk along "narrow passages between houses, each packed with human beings, and a centre of disease. Here the Viceroy," we are quoting from the Calcutta Englishman, saw for himself the appalling filthiness characteristic of a locality where buildings have been constructed without the least regard to light, ventilation, means of access, or sanitary requirements of any description. His Excellency fortunately got away from this plague spot unharmed, but his Secretary, Sir Mackenzie Wallace, who accompanied him, was not so fortunate. He was seized with cholera a few days afterwards, but is now happily recovered, and enjoying the cool breezes of Simla, although the sanitation of even that happy home of the gods is far from being perfect.

THE news telegraphed from Upper Burma is highly unsatisfactory. Dacoity seems to have broken out as bad as ever, and reports of murders in various districts have come to hand. The protestations which were made in the Press and in other quarters against the order directing a general disarmament of the whole population appear now to have been well founded. The unfortunate villagers are without means of defence, and are at the mercy of the maranding dacoits, all of whom appear to be well armed and supplied with ammunition.

The Times Calcutta correspondent calls attention to the abuse which the present Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal—a thorough friend of the Natives—is receiving in the columns of the local Native Press, and he evidently thinks that some official measures ought to be taken to put a stop to a state of things which has long been a scandal. But the abuse may, after all, do little harm if only a few Native gentlemen, like Babú Chuni Lal Ghoshal, having a keen sense of the inconsistencies of their countrymen, have the same courage, and express themselves openly. The Babú in question—who gives not only his name, but his address—writes to the Englishman, calling attention to the fact that the Native scribblers who have been so loud in blaming Lord Dufferin for annexing Upper Burma are equally clamorous for appointments in the medical, postal, and other services in that province.

The increasing tendency in India to amalgamate tea gardens for the sake of economy in working them, is shown by a fall in the number of gardens in Assam from 941 in 1885-86 to 883 at the end of 1886-87. There was, notwithstanding, an increase of 18,283 acres in the area of land taken up for tea, which now amounts to 934,134 acres. The outturn of manufactured tea was the largest ever recorded, the total weight of tea manufactured being estimated at upwards of 61 million pounds. Improved methods of cultivation are increasing the average yield per acre. This average for the whole province last year is variously stated at from 349 to 363 pounds, and it rose to 518 in Lakhimpur, which is the most productive district. In the districts of Sylhet and Kachar the outturn has increased enormously, and will at the present rate very soon equal that of the Assam Valley.

Ir is, however, unfortunate for the planters and all interested in tea cultivation to learn, according to the accounts received by Overland Mail to-day, that cholera is raging with particular virulence among the coolies proceeding to Assam. The mortality is reported to be most lamentably heavy in the large depôts at Calcutta and Dhobri, and many managers in Assam have already had to pay heavy charges for coolie immigrants who got no further than one or other of these depôts when they were attacked by cholera and died.

MR. S. SMITH appears to have got hold of another charge against British administration in India. He has given notice of a question which he intends to put from his place in the House "as to a statement that respectable girls in India are forced into lives of infamy"—by the Government of India, we presume. Let it be hoped that the Under Secretary of State may not shock the moral sense of the honourable member by informing him that in India the Hetairæ boast of a caste of their own, the privileges of which they are very sensitive about, and which they have no desire to see interfered with by meddling Parliamentary busybodies in England.

SIR GEORGE CAMPBELL, whose Catholic sympathies embrace the concerns of all humanity from China to Peru, is going to ask on the same night:—(1) As to illegitimacy in Mauritius; (2) As to the figures on which the Chancellor of the Exchequer calculates the contribution of Scot'aud to the exchequer to be 11 per cent.; (3) As to the present contract for the manufacture of thick and thin halfpenny postcards respectively. Mr. Slagg's double-barrelled motion about the frontier defences and the liquor traffic in India was not nearly so comprehensive in its diversity of objects as this.

THE proceedings in Judge Falkiner's Court, in Dublin last week, were brought to a sudden stop by the arrival of a telegram, announcing that Major Falkiner, son of the Judge, had been drowned in India. The court was immediately adjourned. Details of the occurrence have not yet been received.

A telegram from Cashmere reports thirty cases of cholera.

The disease is assuming a severe type.

The Viceroy will probably leave India in August, the Governor of Bombay acting till the arrival of Lord Lans-

On Wednesday the Nawab of Rampore was installed by the Lieut-Governor of the North-West Provinces. In the course of his speech Sir Archibald Colvin said it was a source of gratification that the health of the Nawab was improving, but meantime he had acted wisely in concurring in the expediency of appointing a council and delegating authority under the Nawab's presidency to carry on the administration. The Lieut.-Governor left the same evening en route for Naini-Tal.

On the 18th the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab presided at the distribution of prizes at Lahore to the 1st Punjab Volunteers. He congratulated the corps on their efficiency and good shooting. He referred to the formation of a Volunteer Reserve, about which he had been in correspondence with Colonel Rivett Carnac, and said that as soon as Colonel Carnac could come to Lahore some practical scheme should be recould come to Lahore some practical scheme should be reported upon. He also alluded to the proposal to admit the children of Volunteers to the military asylums at Sanawar and Murree. He said that the difficulty, so far as Murree was concerned, was owing to the want of room, but he had lately asked the Comment of India to allow the hildren of Volunteers the Government of India to allow the children of Volunteers

A meeting of the Senate of the Punjab University had been iheld to decide, among other things, the important question as to the language in which the terminology of education should be conveyed in the Punjab. The Educational Department generally are, it is believed, in favour of the adoption of English for the purpose.

The Calcutta Municipal Rill is still being discussed in

The Calcutta Municipal Bill is still being discussed in Council. The Indian Mirror of yesterday contains an acrimonious article attacking Sir Steuart Bayley for proceeding with the Bill, this notwithstanding the constant endeavour on the Lieutenant-Governor's part to woo the support of the Native Press. The following extracts from the leading Bengalee paper constitute a useful comment upon the wisdom of the policy of endeavouring, by undue concessions to one small section of the community, to purchase immunity from personal attacks in the Native Press. The article runs:—

"Never has it been our lot to see class legislation like the present Bill introduced in the Bengal Council and attempted to be passed with such gusto and such total disregard of the warnings given by the Native and official members of Council. The unusual course of meeting twice a week to pass a Bill not urgently required is only attributed to the party spirit between Anglo-Indians and Natives, and to the desire of domination by a small minority over the majority. It is our most painful task to see the most retrograde provisions of the Bill passed from week to week in a Council presided over by Sir S. Bayley. week to week in a Council presided over by Sir S. Bayley. Hardly a single Native householder is not struck with consterration at the measure which has been adopted solely in the fleeting interests of Anglo-Indians. Sir S. Bayley," continues the writer, "is in dangerous contiguity to the Anglo-Indian rock. Even the weakest of our rulers, Sir Rivers Thompson, wrestled against falling on this rock till almost the middle of the guidern storial career. It is a matter for worder than that his gubernatorial career. It is a matter for wonder, then, that Sir S. Bayley, with his reputation for firmness, should give signs of Anglo-Indian influence at the close of his first year of rule."

It is hardly necessary to say these complaints are utterly without foundation. The writer knows perfectly well that the Municipal Bill is a matter of absolute indifference to the European community.

BURMA.

RANGOON, APRIL 21.

The dacoit band which raided into Arracan and burned

The dacoit band which raided into Arracan and burned Myohoung police station has been successfully attacked by Major Creswell, the Deputy Commissioner, with a party of Goorkha police. The Dacoit camp was burnt, six dacoits were killed and two captured.

The recent attack by dacoits on Myinmu, when nearly 200 houses in the village were burned, proves to have been a very serious affair. There are, moreover, some unusual incidents connected with it. Brigadier-General Wolseley, accompanied by Brigadier-General Stedman, commanding the military police in Upper Burma, and Colonel Vance, commanding the 15th Madras Infantry, have proceeded to Myinmu to investigate the matters on the spot. The conduct of the officer who commanded the detachment of the 15th Madras Infantry at Myinmu when the village was attacked has been called in Myinmu when the village was attacked has been called in question. It is alleged that he failed to afford any assistance question. It is alleged that he failed to afford any assistance to the villagers when they were attacked, and kept his men inactive, although he might easily have attacked the dacoits, as the military post was only half-a mile distant from where the dacoits were burning the village. When the dacoits retreated after burning the village they stuck up two Burmese placards on the bridge leading to the fort. These documents stated that the attack had been made for the purpose of killing the village Thugyee. It was added that before annexation the Thugyee had been merely a coolie, and the document charged him with gross cruelty since his appointment, declaring that he had flogged several men so severely that they had subsequently died. The Thugyee appears, however, to have enjoyed the confidence of the district officers.

Various administrative changes have been made in Tsagain.

Various administrative changes have been made in Tsagain.
Mr. Colquhoun, Deputy Commissioner of the district, proceeds to Mogouta to take charge of the Ruby Mines District.
He is replaced by Mr. Fforde, formerly police officer and recently Deputy Commissioner at Mogouta. Mr. Colquhoun's administrative ability will be found useful at the Ruby Mines, where much difficult work remains to be depre-

As the result of the recent outbreak at Myinmu portions of Yau and the lower Chindwin districts adjoining Tsagain are disturbed. The post at Pantaloko, in the Moo valley, held by the military police, was attacked by a large gang of dacoits. The Punjabees resisted for two hours with great spirit, and the associated was affected. assailants were finally repulsed. Six police were killed. In Shwebo the Kambaloo village was burnt by dacoits, and 6,000

The last official bulletin reports the following incident:

There have been four dacoities in the Myadoung district, in one of which three men were murdered. In Shwebo two men one of which three men were murdered. In Shwebo two men who had given information to the Government were murdered by dacoits. In the Mandalay and Myingan districts loyal Thugyees had been murdered by dacoits. In Yau a gang of dacoits who had attacked a village were pursued by the police. Four dacoits were killed, and a large quantity of cattle was recovered. In Toungdwingyee a dacoit leader was killed by the police, and two dacoit leaders who had given much trouble were captured. were captured.

A strong gale broke over Mandalay on the 18th, doing much damage. The Irrawaddy Flotilla Company's steamer Aphouk was swamped at the landing place, and the Cambay, another steamer of the company, was driven ashore lower down the river. A young white elephant recently captured has been sent from Mandalay to Rangoon. As white elephants are held by the Burmese to be sacred, and are regarded as emblems of Burmese Royalty, it was concerned inadvisable to keep the elephant at

Mandalay.

The present condition of the Mon valley, in Upper Burma, affords a good illustration of the evils of the disarmament policy now being enforced, and shows the impossibility of rallying the peasantry to British rule while such a system is maintained. These districts, which are among the richest in Upper Burma, are practically ruled by Ottawa, formerly Boh-Shway's chief lieutenant. Ottawa is no ordinary daccit chief. The local authorities in his district have to contend not with robber gangs, but with far-reaching and elaborately-planned organisation. Ottawa now styles himself Mingyec, or chief minister. He claims to have received this title from the Shwaygyobin Prince, one of the Alompra pretenders. The country comprising the Mon valley and adjoining districts is divided between Ottawa and his lieutenants. The villagers have to pay taxes, for which they are regularly assessed, and are bound to comply with the requisitions for food. If the villagers do this they are protected from dacoits, and no stranger is allowed either to dacoit or levy taxes. Our police stations are occasionally attacked, but, as a rule, Ottawa's action is confined to punishing those Burmese who actively assist us, give us information, or act as village headmen. Death is the invariable penalty for any of these acts or for any disobedience to Ottawa's orders. The villages are surrounded at night and men who have offended taken out and killed. And stray Natives of India are dealt with in the same manner. Four Sepoys were captured some time ago and brought before Ottawa himself, who ordered them to be imme-

The pursuit of Ottawa has been persistently maintained. The country is, however, very difficult—a long, narrow valley, with miles of wild jungle on each side. Ottawa and his bodyguard live in the jungle, constantly shifting their camp. Ottawa takes extraordinary precautions, and is said never to sleep in his camp. Accompanied by one or two attendants he remains about a quarter of a mile away. It is an absolute impossibility to afford thorough police protection to villagers in the district. To do so it would be necessary to place military or police guard in every village. This would involve in increasing our force in the district sixfold. As the villagers are rigorously disarmed the largest villages are at the mercy of half-a-dozen dacoits who arrive with guns. Little surprise c in be felt that under such circumstances it is found impossible to get the peasantry to give information, and that the villager stand aloof from the British. They have to choose between certain death at the hands of the dacoits—as the whole village population have been disarmed and left without means of resistance—or of incurring the censure of our authorities. The result is not doubtful. The civil administration on the Mon division has been under the control of Mr. Latouche as Commissioner. Mr. Latouche, who came to Burma from the North-West Provinces with a high reputation, has under exceptionally difficult circumstances shown ability in administering the most difficult district in Upper Burma.

URGENT TRANSPORT REFORM NECESSARY. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

It is well that the Government has at last taken up the question of employing its transport animals in some way that will less on the burden of their keep, otherwise it would be impossible to maintain this important branch of the Commissariat Department with anything like adequate efficiency. Were it possible so to utilise transport in time or peace that it should cost nothing, except interest on a capital value and outlay to make good deterioration, then the question of keeping up transport of the property of the problem. port sufficient to put in the field one Army Corps, with another ready in second line, would at once be solved. If, on the other hand, the transport cannot be made to pay any portion of its cost, then it becomes financially impossible to maintain more than the old establishment kept up for movable columns in The practical solution appears to lie between certain stations. these extremes. Transport animals can, we think, be made to earn a considerable portion of their keep; but it is quite hopeless that they should earn the entire cost of both their feed and their attendants. The Commissariat Department should not only carry its own food, fodder, and fuel supplies, but should carry materials for the Public Works which are executed in cantonments. Similarly, so long as Government bullocks and mules are standing unemployed, the Postal Department should not pay contractors for ponies and bullocks on its tonga and bullock-train lines. Doubtless, if the question were one between hiring animals for the above purposes, or keeping up Government animals, there could be no doubt of the economy of the former method. Why should coolies be paid to shunt at the great railway stations when there are elephants standing idle in the adjacent cantonments which can not only do the coolie's work, but also much which is now done by engines? And why should old rails and sleepers be sold off for building purposes which could be better utilised for tramways on feeder-roads, to be worked by Commissariat bullocks? If the Railways will not undertake the tramways, the District Officers probably will do so. Let any District Officer, who is willing to make and work a tramway, be authorised to indent on the Railway Department for old rails and sleepers free of charge, so long as he undertakes to find money for the rest of the outlay. Let him have from the Commissariat Department, as ment bulleds as he requires with such subsidy a may be as many bullocks as he requires, with such subsidy as may be necessary for their maintenance—that subsidy to be diminished.

and perhaps finally dropped, as his earnings improve. We imagine that many energetic and public-spirited Civil Officers would promptly close with such an offer, and that the result would soon be seen in the recovery of old market-towns now perishing through distance from the railway, and the general improvement of trade and prices in outlying districts and parasana.

THE POLICE (Pioneer.)

In Southern no less than in Northern India it would seem that the police are beginning to be regarded as inefficient and in need of reorganisation. In the Madras Presidency last year the percentage of convictions secured in the case of graver offences was exceedingly low; and both the Government and the Magistracy are inclined to attribute this unsatisfactory result in a great measure to the incapacity of the police, and the evil credit into which they have fallen with the Courts. The Madras Government consider that some part of the fall in convictions is due to the distrust manifested by Courts of police evidence and police-obtained confessions, a result, it is added, possibly caused not so much by deterioration in the police as by the extended publicity given of late years to those cases wherein the action of the police has been open to question. There may be some truth in this view, but it can hardly be otherwise than partial. The Courts are aware of cases where the police have distinguished themselves as well as of those where they have been disgraced; and their evidence as a class could hardly come to be regarded with general suspicion without good reason. Whether the suspicion be just or unjust, at any rate, the lamentable failure in the conviction of criminals which results from it remains the same; nor can any improvement be looked for until the credit of the police is reestablished.

THE CALCUTTA POLICE. (Englishman.)

The authorities continue from year to year assigning love of ease as the cause which prevents Bengalis from joining the Calcutta Police Force. Last year the number of up-country men in the force was 1,907, and that of Bengalis only 189, while it is officially stated that "men of the latter class still refuse to undergo the fatigue and exposure imposed on a police officer employed on duty in the streets of a large town." It is to be presumed that those who have to do with the matter know most about it; yet it may be presumed that physical fitness enters into the problem. The post of durwan is at once easy and lucrative, and yet the durwans of Calcutta are even more exclusively up-country men than the police. The fact is that the most patriotic landowner or merchant in Bengal, as much as the English resident, is fully alive to the necessity of securing a man of powerful physique, who can lend a hand, if need be, to the protection of the property which he is employed to safeguard.

PASSAGES ON TROOPSHIPS. (Pioneer.)

It is clear that some understanding will have to be arrived about the system of granting passages on troopships if more woe than weal is not to come of the privilege. Our sympathy goes with the officer going on leave in his natural desire to get a free passage home; it is extended to the official whose sanction is asked on behalf of a fellow-officer, and yet more when it is asked on behalf of the fellow-officer's wife. It would be churlish to refuse, and he very seldom does. But nothing but reproaches are kept for the "horrid" Bombay officials, who make so many difficulties about what their brethren of the Quartermaster-General's Department up-country can grant so readily. In justice to the latter it must be remembered that there is still such a thing as the impossible: and that they cannot find room for more passengers than the ships will hold. There is but one more troopship going home, and there are already, we are told, thirty ladies down for passages in excess of the number which can be taken. There must, therefore, be at least that number of disappointments, while it will probably be largely swelled by fresh applications. The facile compliance of the up-country authorities seems then in reality but a cruel kindness; and if they were to harden their hearts from the first, it would not only remove a most unjust reproach from the first, it would not only remove a most unjust reproach from the first, it would not only remove a most unjust reproach from the Guartermaster-General's Office in Bombay, but save many worse disappointments from plans being upset at the last moment. And even this brief statement of the case may perhaps serve as a warning to people who are still reckoning upon going home by trooper.

IRRIGATION IN INDIA. (Englishman.)

In respect of irrigation, there is a striking contrast between Bombay and Madras. In the Southern Presidency there are works which pay a handsome profit on their capital cost, and irrigate millions of acres. In Bombay the most productive works pay but a trifle more than one per cent. on their cost, while the minor works, some twenty-five in number, do not return to Government the amount of their current expenses. The entire area irrigated in Bombay, excluding Sind, by all the Works, is less than 200,000 acres. This marked difference between the results obtained is mainly due to the different physical features of the two Presidencies, Madras being blessed with great rivers pouring down an almost inexhaustible supply of water, Bombay having few large streams, and being compelled, in almost all cases, to supplement its water courses by great storage tanks which impound the rainfall until the season when it can be advantageously utilised. The total capital invested in irrigation works in Bombay is slightly less than 225 lakhs of rupees, of which about six lakhs was expended during 1886-87. This capital has been expended on 39 works, of which 35 are in operation. The area irrigated showed a slight decrease as compared with the previous year, the rainfall having been favourable to cultivation.

THE RECENT EPISCOPAL CONFERENCE. (Statesman.)

The proposed increase in the Indian Episcopate, which engaged their Lordships' attention during the recent episcopal conference in Calcutta, is awakening, we find, considerable interest in various parts of the country. The bishops, it will be remembered, drew attention in the authorised minutes of their proceedings to three distinct subjects. (1) Temperance; (2) purity; and (3) the increase of the Episcopate. We do not propose to comment upon the minutes in detail, but to make some general observations upon the proposed extension of the present ecclesiastical establishment. What their Lordships really propose to do does not clearly appear. A hint is thrown out, however, that any increase in the episcopal staff should be made by Letters Patent, but never did words more ingeniously disguise a need or an object than the minutes of the conference.

All that they really show is that the subject was discussed. In the present state of the Indian Exchequer it is strongly felt—not by Hindu and Mussulman only, but by the European community—that any increase of the annual burden already laid upon the people would be insupportable, and nothing could be more impolitic or unwise than an attempt to increase the cost of the establishment. It has long been matter of debate whether the treasury should be drawn upon at all to support an establishment which is altogether alien to the religious thought and to every sympathy of the people. Temples are endowed, it is true, and some of them very liberally, but the temples and mosques of India have so deep a hold on the religious life of the people that whether their ancient endowments were secured to them or not they would live and endure. No wise statesman would think of interfering with them, or of touching these old endowments. Our eccesiastical establishment stands upon another footing altogether, and is a very costly luxury. Its cost does not fall far short, we believe, of a quarter of a million sterling a year. Twenty-five lakhs of rupees are annually expended upon keeping up our cathedrals and military and non-military churches, with their chaplains, servants, buildings, and furnishing grants, pensions and outfits. If, then, additional bishoprics are to be created at a cost of three or four lakhs a year each, in addition to the present cost of the Establishment, India will justly ask, and with emphasis, Is it right? Can we reasonably expect the Native community quietly to submit to an increase—say of the salt tax, the kerosene oil duty, with an income-tax and taxes on professions—simply to provide lucrative places for high ecclesiastics of a religion which, with all its incompanable excellencies, presents a front of uncompromising hostility to their own. What, moreover, of our unendowed churches? The Government of India is being done by churches that are unendowed. It is matter of notoriety how little is

The announcement that the Metropolitan was going on furlongh to England was synchronous with the publication of these minutes. The times are as favourable as they are ever likely to be for the objects contemplated, and they seem to have a view to certain eventualities. The movement for the disestablishment of the State Churches at home is not dead. It will ultimately, and probably at no very distant period, achieve success. During the late Ministry, our ecclesiastical authorities received, we believe, a preliminary warning that the Church in India must prepare to stand alone. Neither Mr. Gladstone, of course, nor any other Minister would propose that existing appointments should be done away with, without compensation to their incumbents. Existing rights would have to be capitalised or compounded for, but no Government, of which either Mr. Gladstone or Lord Ripon may be a member, will ever agree to an extension of the Episcopate. The only chance of such a movement is now, under the Salisbury-Hartington combination. The Church must look for support to its own wealthy congregations. Are our Indian officials, merchants, and professional men who throng our cathedrals and Military churches Sunday after Sunday really discharging their proper responsibilities? Surely, in consideration of the past liberality of the Government, they might them selves endow a couple of Indian bishoprics if necessary. It is being done at home, and might be well accomplished in India if some Indian Boyd Carpenter were to arise amongst us to take the matter up. When we remember that there are cities in India, with no fewer than seven or eight or even more Government churches, not one-half of which could by any process of ingenuity be shown to be necessary for military purposes, we cannot think that it would be for the advantage either of the country or the Church itself, that the existing establishment should be increased. At all events, it will get no assistance from any part of the Press: of that we are sure.

WASTE IN THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT. (Civil and Military Gazette.)

In these days of retrenchment it will be conceded that every branch of the public service ought to be worked as economically as possible, with due regard to efficiency; but it is well known that this is not the case, and that the greatest sinners, perhaps, are the heads of departments. Departmental Officers, both Civil and Military, are often moved quite unnecessarily, merely to sustain some tradition regarding acting appointments, and thus great expense is incurred both by individuals and the State.

There is no branch of the public service in which this ridiculous waste of money is more evident than in the Medical (Military) Department, and immense sums of money are literally thrown away every year on unnecessary moves. A case recently came to our knowledge where a Surgeon of the Medical Staff—a married man—landed at Bombay, and was, as usual, sent to Deolali. After a few delays there this officer was ordered up country with troops; but no one could tell him his ultimate destination. So, like the man with the cork leg, "on he went " till he found himself, with his wife and heavy baggage, at the mouth of the Khyber Pass! At every station where he halted on the way up he made inquiries; but no one could tell him where he was ultimately to go. So there was nothing for it but to travel on, with all his impedimenta, at Government expense; till at last he could go no further—unless, indeed, he went on to Cabul to pay the Ameer a visit. — thast it was discovered that he was intended for a station low down in the Bengal Presidency. So back he was sent—"wife, baggage, and 'a"—at Government expense, till he finally arrived at the station he was to remain in. Now, had the Surgeon-General's Office sent a list to the Commandant at Deolali of the stations of all medical officers arriving by troopship the authorities there could have detailed new arrivals to duty with troops proceeding to their respective stations as near to them as possible, or at all events could have sent his wife and baggage there on a warrant. At present a Medical Officer intended for Calcutta may, quite possibly, be sent to Peshawar; and, of course, not knowing where he is finally to be stationed, he takes his family (if he has one) and baggage all the way at public expense. Cases like this happen every trooping season; and large sums of money are wasted, simply because the most ordinary precautions are not taken to prevent such unnecessary journeys.

Again, large sums of money are wasted every year in sending medical officers and medical subordinates in troop trains. A few healthy soldiers cannot travel from, say, Rawalpindi to Peshawar without the attendance of a Medical Officer. In olden days, when troops marched by road, or went in boats or steamers, such arrangements were necessary, as they were cut off from medical aid for days, or weeks at a time off from medical aid for days, or weeks, at a time.

All this, however, is now changed, and it would be quite sufficient to give the Officer in Command a box containing a few of the simplest remedies for emergencies, and to see that with each party there were one or two men who had been instructed in Ambulance drill and aid to the wounded. In the event of any serious case happening, the Officer in Command should be authorised to telegraph to the first station at which there was a Civil Surgeon to desire him to meet the train and attend to the patient, and a list of such stations should be prepared and given to the Military Officers by the Quartermaster-General's Department before departure.

It should be borne in mind that trains run daily all over India, carrying Civil and Military Officers and their families, besides the general public, without any medical arrangements; yet healthy soldiers cannot be moved a few miles without a dector or an apothecary to look after them. It would be easy to have a return prepared of the number of times during layer and season troops travelling by train (always excepting in cold season troops travelling by train (always excepting invalids) were accompanied by a Medical Officer, and how often his services were required. The expense could then be calculated; and we think it would be found that the necessity for medical aid in troop frains was of such rare occurrence that, in fact, the game is not worth the candle.

If this system were abolished, and one like that suggested adopted—giving the Civil Surgeon a reasonable fee for his attendance at the station, say Rs. 16—we think that at the end of the Financial year there would be a marked saving on this head. It should also be borne in mind that Medical Officers travelling with troops are given no allowance, and are put to much expense, so the duty is very unpopular; and again, when taken away from their hospitals they have to make over temporary charge of their patients to another Medical Officer, which is certainly not conducive to the rapid recovery of the sick soldier.

Altogether the present system—a remnant of bygone days would be far more honoured in the breach than in the observance; no one would suffer, and the State, the sick in hospital, and the Medical Officers would be the gainers. This is clearly a case for some Indian reformer in the House of Commons, and we commend it to his attention.

BENGAL.

IMPORTANT changes have been suggested in regard to contingent expenditure in Bengal. Hitherto the Government grants to districts have been rigidly restricted, but now the Commissioners of Divisions are to have control of all grants in the Divisions, except those to Judges. The Commissioner may utilise saving as he sees fit, and the Government will regrant balances at the close of each year.

THE Viceroy attended a meeting of the Calcutta Municipal Commissioners on the 27th ult., at which the budget for 1888-89 was considered. Lord Dufferin remained for some time, and, when he left handed the following memorandum to the and, when he left handed the following memorandum to the Chairman, which Sir H. Harrison subsequently read to the meeting:—"When the meeting is over will you kindly express on my behalf the great pleasure which I have derived from witnessing your proceedings? To see so many persons of intelligence, representing both the European and Native element, devoting their time and talents to the improvement of the town of Calcutta, is very satisfactory. I must add that I have been much struck by the orderly, practical, and dignified manner in which the business of the meeting has been conducted. My in which the business of the meeting has been conducted. My best sympathy and good wishes will always accompany the labours of the Municipal Council and the welfare of those whose affairs they administer."

THE foreign consuls in Calcutta waited on the Viceroy the following day at Government House to bid him farewell, headed by the Chevalier Gallian, Consul-General for Italy, the doyen of the consular body. Signor Gallian addressed his Excellency in French, expressing the regret of his fellow-officers at his departure, and their appreciation of the unfailing kindness and courtesy always extended to the consular body both by the Viceroy and Lady Dufferin. His Excellency, replying in French, said he was glad to be able to look back to most pleasant relations with the entire consular body. It would always be a pleasure to him in the future to meet any of the representatives of the various nations he was addressing, and he hoped to meet Chevalier Gallian before very long in Rome.

A RATHER serious accident has occurred at the Mysore Residency. Sir Harry Prendergast's carriage had just started, with his daughter and another young lady and little girl, when with his daughter and another young lady and little girl, when a peacock suddenly flashed across in front of the horses. The animals took fright and bolted at a furious gallop towards the Mysore Government Press. Dashing down a slope and crossing some nasty ground, they headed for a grove of small trees and shrubs. The carriage came in violent contact with a tree, which tore the hind wheels away and pitched the driver from his seat. The carriage now became a kind of sledge, pand dragging heavily on the frightened horses eventually stopped them. The young ladies stuck to their seats, and fortunately got off with only a few bruises, Miss Prendergast's worst injury being a bruised or cut cheek. The coach man had his arm and back injured.

THE Madras Mail understands that arrangements have been made for holding a Mahomedan Congress at Allahabad in February next, when certain important questions affecting the Mahomedans will be discussed.

REPRESENTATIVES are expected to proceed to Allahabad from all parts of India, and thirty delegates will go from Madras.

BOMBAY.

THE list of Justices of the Peace for the city of Bombay is published in the Bombay Government Gazette. The following are the new Justices:—Messrs. John De Courcy Atkins, C.S.; Thomas Alfred Bulkley, M.I.C.E.; Charles Frederick Farran, B.A.; Ghelabhoy Haridas; Haji Abdus Sittar Haji Saheb; Haji Mohamed Haji Ismail; Haji Mohamed Ibrahim, alias Bapusahèb Jitakai; Hajibhoy Lalji; William Ellerther Hart, B.A.; Joseph John Heaton, C.S.; William Lee-Warner, C.S.; James Macdonald; Manekji Byramji Dadabhoy: Manekjee Pestonjee Tabac; Moreshwar Gopal Deshmukh, M.D.; Mushi Shaik Ahmed Dalvi; Nilkant Mahadeo; Pestonji Manekji, G.C.M.G.; Ratanshah Erachshah Kohiyar; Alfred Cotterell Tupp, B.A. and F.S.S.; and Edward Wilkin. Sir Frank Souter, who proposed the election, spoke of the valuable services rendered by Mr. Sayani for several years past, both in the Corporation and the Town Council. On the motion of Mr. Dosabhoy Framjee the following resolution was carried by acclamation:—"That this meeting has pleasure in placing of the valuable services rendered by record its high sense of the valuable services rendered by Captain Sir Henry Morland, Kt., as Chairman of the Municipal Corporation, and of the great ability with which he has discharged the duties of that honourable office. The Corporation at the same time tender their best thanks to Sir Henry Morland for the care and assiduity with which he has dis-charged the important duties of his office, and the uniform courtesy and urbanity extended by him to his colleagues."

THE local correspondent of the Pioneer writes to that paper: During the past fortnight the greatest architectural and the —During the past fortnight the greatest architectural and the greatest engineering work done in India for a great many years was completed, and its completion has been marked by no pomp and ceremony. The new Victoria Terminus is one of the finest buildings erected by the English in India, and last week the unveiling of a fine statue of the Queen, the last act in a very important work, was performed before a few coolies. Now, considering that the son of the Empress is in Bombay and would have gladly unveiled the statue if asked the Rail. and would have gladly unveiled the statue if asked, the Railway authorities might have spent a few thousand rupees in having a civic show. A few hundred rupees might have been spent in feasting the workmen who had been employed on the work. We too much neglect public festivities as a means of ingratiating ourselves with the Natives of the land. We give the Native peace and order; but he must sometimes sigh for the amusement which he enjoyed under his own master. The Victoria Dock, one of the finest docks in the world, was opened with the same lack of ceremony; only a few Europeans and a sprinkling of Natives were present to see the first ship enter the dock. The trustees of a rich port might have spent enter the dock. The trustees of a rich port might have spent a few thousand rupees on affording a day's pleasure to the inhabitants of the city. Hundreds of people, whose life is a dull round of toil and penury, at a small cost might have been given a little enjoyment. Economy and parsimony are two very different qualities. It is the latter which characterises both the G. I. P. Railway and the Port Trust.

It was recently announced that the Zil es-Sultan, second son of the Shah, had been honoured with the G.C.S.I. The Bombay Gazette now learns that the Russian Embassy took umbrage at this mark of favour on the part of the British Government, and it is believed in Teheran that powerful influence has been brought to bear upon the Persian Government to the detriment of the Prince. It is certain that the Shah has been induced to deprive the Zil-es-Sultan of the Governorship of Ispahan; and this step is attributed to the pressure brought to bear upon the Shah by the Russian Embersy.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

THE Allahabad paper says that it is generally understood in Lucknow that some attempt will be made to resist or delay the passing of the Bill through Parliament, by which the jurisdiction of the High Court of the North-West Provinces will be extended to Oudh. That the Bill must eventually become law can hardly be doubted, but it is quite possible that a member of Parliament, such as Sir George Campbell—himself a quondam Judicial Commissioner—may be induced to plead the cause of the Talukdars and to dispose the Government to think that the time for the change is not yet, and that they had better "bide."

Some correspondence of a painful nature has recently taken place in one of the local papers regarding an alleged misconducted funeral at Montgomery. It appears that a lady, the wife of the ex-Deputy Commissioner of Montgomery and at present Divisional Judge of Jhelum, died about a fortnight ago, and according to a correspondent the body was raced to the cemetery by Natives, so that the Chaplain had to run to keep up. The husband declined to allow two Europeans, who followed, to render any aid, and the grave was allowed to remain uncovered for some days, and no death certificate was produced. Mr. Thomas Troward, the husband of the deceased, writes denying the allegation regarding the racing. He says the European assistance was declined, as he thought the men were idlers, and he desired a quiet funeral. The grave was allowed to remain partially uncovered for some days owing to a misapprehension. Mr. Troward says that his wife died of heart-disease. In face of inquiries made by the local paper in question, the latter is not quite satisfied with the explanation. The matter will remain more or less in doubt, unless the Chaplain gives his version of the proceeding. Mr. Troward says that, on being asked, the Chaplain did not consider a certificate of death necessary.

MARRIAGE OF MR. RICHARD EDGELL AND MISS FAYRER.

The marriage of Mr. Richard Arnold Edgell, eldest son of Colonel Richard John Edgell, Retired List, Bengal Army, with Diana Agnes, elder daughter of Sir Joseph Fayrer, K.C.S.I., F.R.S., took place in Westminster Abbey last Thursday afternoon, in the presence of a numerous gathering. The ceremony was appointed for 1.45. Mr. Denham Westmacott, assisted as best man to the bridegroom (his cousin). The bridesmaids were Miss Beta Fayrer (sister of the bride), Miss Helen Edgell (sister of the bridegroom), Miss Williams, Miss Alston, Miss Lily Craik, Miss Helen Stewart and Miss Ethel Grimston. Miss Lilian Edgell (niece of the bridegroom), acted as trainbearer, wearing a tan plush dress with silver belt, and hat to match. The bridesmaids' dresses were of cream serge, trimmed with antique lustre embroidery, with which they wore white felt hats trimmed with velvet and ribbon and gold lace, with aigrettes to match the embroidery on their dresses; and each carried a bouquet of white flowers tied with pink ribbon. The bride, who was given away by her father, was attired in white faille trimmed with very fine Honiton lace, the gift of the bridegroom's mother, wore a cluster of orange blossoms in her hair; and a tulle veil fastened by a diamond crescent. The wedding party assembled in the Jerusalem Chamber, and, as the bridal procession passed along the nave to the choir, Dr. Bridge, the organist, played the "Bridal March" from Lohengrin. The bride and bridegroom having taken their places under the lantern, the choir sang the hymn, "Jesus calls us." The Very Rev. the Dean of Rochester officiated, assisted by the Rev. W. Page Roberts, and the canon in residence. At the conclusion of the marriage, and before the final blessing, the marriage chorale, "Father of Life confessing," by the Rev. S. Flood Jones (Precentor), the music by the late James Turle, organist of Westminster Abbey, was admirably rendered by the choir. The clergy, bride, and bridegroom, and near relatives, then returned to the Jerusalem Chamber for the registrati

WE have been asked by the hon. Secretary to the Indian Church Aid Association to remind those of our readers who are interested that the annual sermon in aid of the society will be preached in Holy Trinity Church, Brompton, on Sunday morning, June 17, by the Bishop of Bombay. The annual meeting will be held at Willis's Rooms on the following Tuesday, June 19, at 2.30 P.M., when Sir R. Temple, Bart., M.P., will preside.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

As the regiments now in Upper Burma will cease to be considered as on Foreign Field Service from the 1st April, the following arrangements are made regarding the disposal of the depôts, &c., of the Madras regiments. All special allowances, establishments, and appointments will cease. The depôts of regiments will be attached as follows, and each depôt placed under the charge of an officer, and commanded by the Commanding Officer of the Regiment to which it is attached:
—1st Madras Lancers, Bangalore, as at present; 6th Madras Infantry, Bellary, to be attached to 14th Madras Infantry; 13th Madras Infantry, Bellary, to be attached to 14th Madras Infantry; 16th Madras Infantry, Vizianagrum, to be attached to 28th Madras Infantry; 27th Madras Infantry, Seetabuldee, to be attached to 23rd Light Infantry; 32nd Madras Infantry, Bangalore, to be attached to 25th Madras Infantry.

The Station Staff Officer, Vellore, will continue to command the Depôts 10th and 15th Regiments Madras Infantry, but without any special allowance. The duties connected with each depôt will continue to be the same as hitherto, and as laid down in Army Regulations, Officers Commanding the Regiments to which the depôts are attached being responsible for the enlisting and training of recruits. The Madras Infantry Depôt, Pallaveram, being maintained for the reception, treatment, and return to their regiments of invalids from Burma, the instructions contained in Army Regulations, so far as they relate to the disposal of invalids, will in future be applicable to regiments serving in Upper, as well as in Lower Burma.

WITH a view to further reduce army references to Army Headquarters, it has been decided to allow general officers commanding divisions and districts to dispose of the following references in future:—(a) Transfer of Native soldiers (Bengal and Bombay); (b) continuance of staff pay to ressaldar-major and subadar-major (Bengal and Bombay); (c) replacement of lost medals to Native soldiers (applicable to the three Presidencies); (d) advances to Silladar cavalry under the provisions of Article 164, Army Regulations, India, Volume 1, Part II. (Bengal and Bombay).

THEFTS of arms at Rawal Pindi still continue. On the 9th instant a Martini-Henri rifle was stolen from the camp of the Northumberland Fusiliers; and a rifle was also stolen from the lines of the 20th Punjab Native Infantry on the night of the 13th ultimo.

Major F. H. R. Drummond, of the 11th Lancers, at present officiating Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General, Intelligence Branch, at Simla, has been appointed Private Secretary to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, vice Captain Davies.

THE command of the Gwalior Brigade will, on the command being vacated by Brigadier-General Marter, devolve on Brigadier-General R. M. Rogers, C.B., V.C., now commanding the Agra Brigade; the two commands being held conjointly as a 1st class Brigade Command.

It is understood that when Brigadier-General C. J. East, C.B., vacates his Brigade Command in July next, that Brigadier-General W. Galbraith will be brought on the Bengal Establishment in succession.

THE 23rd Pioneers are to move to Quetta during the first week in April; the regiment remaining under canvas until the huts are ready to receive them.

In view to further testing the suitability of Panchmarhi as an acclimatising station for troops from England, the Government of India have sanctioned the despatch of a party of seventy-four young soldiers of the 2nd Battalion Royal Warwickshire Regiment, from Jubbulpore to Panchmarhi for location there during the coming hot season. It is believed that Panchmarhi is destined to become a station of considerable importance in the near future.

As a special case, the tenure of appointment of Lieutenant-Colonel D. L. S. McLeod as Deputy Quartermaster-General, Madras Army, has been extended to the 28th November next.

THE Government of India have approved of the abolition of the Military Prison at Jhansi.

THE command of the Volunteer Reserve Battalion to be formed in connection with the Presidency Volunteers will be conferred on Major Reginald Crauford Sterndale, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, Retired, Cantonment Magistrate of Dum-Dum. A General Order announcing the formation of the corps under the designation of the "Presidency Volunteer Reserve Battalion" will shortly be issued. The Adjutant of the Presidency Rifle Volunteers can, it is thought, exercise the supervision necessary for the drill and instruction of the men if he has the assistance of a drill instructor for every two companies, and a sergeant instructor for office work. These appointments have been sanctioned. The rules for the formation of the corps will be published in the Calcutta Gazette; and it has to be considered whether they should come under

THE BURMA RUBY MINES.

The following letter appears in to-day's Times:

Sir.—As the time is drawing nigh for a final settlement in relation to the concession by the Secretary of State for India of the Burma Ruby Mines, and as but little information has hitherto been afforded to the public upon this interesting subject, I venture to request the publication of the following details in your influential journal.

In December, 1885, the mines in question having become well known to everybody interested in precious stones, Messrs. Streeter and Son, being at the head of a syndicate formed for the purpose of obtaining the concession for working these mines, instructed me to apply to the India Office on their behaf. Lord Harris, then Under-Secretary of State for India, beha f. Lord Harris, then Under-Secretary of State for India, personally advised me to proceed to India for the purpose of submitting our proposals to the Indian Government, with which, as he officially informed me by letter, the consideration and decision of the matter rested. Sir Owen Burne also officially apprised me that the Secretary of State was not disposed to take any action in the matter, which was one "entirely for the Government of India to consider."

After heaving made personal inquiry at Mandaley into the

After having made personal inquiry at Mandalay into the productive capacities of the Ruby Mines, I was invited by the Indian Government on April 8, 1886, to submit to them a final tender for the concession in question. I did so immediately, tendering four lakhs of rupees per annum, the mining lease to be granted for five years. This tender was accepted by the Governor-General in Council on April 16, 1886, condiby the Governor-General in Council on April 16, 1886, conditionally upon my acceptance of rights eventually to be accorded by the Government to the Native miners. The Government could not take possession of the mines, however, till January, 1887, serious delays having accrued in the despatch of the military expedition. My syndicate having been invited by the Government to send a representative with the expedition for the purpose of making terms with the Native lessee, Mr. J. Streeter and Major C. Bill proceeded to Mandalay, where they were received by the Chief Commissioner of Burma, as the officially-recognised concessionaires of the Ruby Mines. They accompanied the expedition, a military order having been issued enjoining the troops to put Mr. Streeter into possession of the mines upon arrival in the Ruby district.

The Chief Commissioner of Burma, having visited the

The Chief Commissioner of Burma, having visited the mines in March, 1887, and having carefully investigated the Native rights, &c., on his return to Rangoon handed to Mr. J. Streeter the signed draft agreement between Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India on the one part and Messrs.

Streeter on the other. This agreement was sanctioned by the Streeter on the other. This agreement was sanctioned by the Viceroy in Council on May 25, 1887, having undergone some slight alteration. In a telegram addressed by the Viceroy to the Secretary of State on June 5, 1887, his Excellency, referring to the official acceptance of this tender, wrote as follows:—
"We see no just grounds for cancelling this arrangement."

These are the wain facts of the transaction coulded be

These are the main facts of the transaction concluded be-tween the Indian Government and Messrs. Streeter. In calling public attention to them in your columns, I desire to state that nothing has been at any time done, written, or said, either by my syndicate or myself, which has been concealed from the knowledge of official authority, and that we now most earnestly court publicity, administrative, Parliamentary, and journalistic. Upon these facts our claims to the concession of the Burma Ruby Mines are based. They have been concisely embodied in a memorial to the Secretary of State for India from which in conclusion. I quote the following for India, from which, in conclusion, I quote the following paragraphic summary

1. That I went to India at the recommendation of the Under-Secretary of State, Lord Harris.

2. That Lord Randolph Churchill, the Secretary of State, officially informed me that the concession was one entirely for the Government of India to consider.

3. That we were called upon by the Government of India to send in our definite final tender on the 8th of April, 1886.

4. That our final tender was provisionally accepted by the Government of India.

5. That, owing to this acceptance, we have already incurred an expenditure of £10,000.

6. That the Indian Government repeatedly promised to complete these negotiations in our favour. That the Government of India did actually complete these negotiations, and did thereby sanction the concession in our favour.—I remain, Sir, your obedient servant, AUBREY L. PATTON.

Our Food Supply.—Mr. Thorsten Nordenfeldt, whose name is already associated with some of the most successful inventions and commercial enterprises of the day, has now added the Normal Food Company, Limited, in order that he might develop certain inventions, the objects of which are to turn to better account than before the enormous produce of the sea fisheries, by utilising fish at the ports of landing as raw material for conversion into more valuable products, thus saving the great expense of transport and waste which has been unavoidable when only sending the fish to the markets; and also in order to introduce various improved articles of food for home consumption and for export. The experiments necessary to prove the utility of these inventions have now been completed; suitable machinery has been designed and erected; three large factories have been established at Aberdeen, Barra, and Faroe. To enumerate all the food product manufactured by the Normal Company is not necessary. A well-known army surgeon confirms the opinion of many analytical chemists and other authorities, viz., that they are nutritious, wholesome, and appétissant, and are very moderate in price. The preserved fish are excellent, and will be highly appreciated by Anglo-Indians at Bara-haziri and Tiffin. necessary to prove the utility of these inventions have now

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

A STORY OF ACTIVE SERVICE IN FOREIGN LANDS.*

Books of travel are so numerous that it savours somewhat books of travel are so numerous that it savours somewhat of presumption for a fresh comer to court public favour; yet the world is large enough to display continually new fields of general interest. Dr. Young, too, appears to have journeyed here, there, and everywhere. First of all he turns up at the Cape of Good Hope in company with the 60th Rifles, to which he was then (1860) attached; and the book appear with an Cape of Good Hope in company with the 60th Rifles, to which he was then (1856) attached; and the book opens with an amusing account of a "dignity ball" amongst the darkies; and much that is new to the majority of readers is told anent the Caffres, with their sweet language, uncouth manners, and idle habits. That elegant plumage and sweet song are not as a rule combined as regards the feathered portion of Creation is well known; but we avow that it appears a somewhat astounding circumstance that canaries at the Cape should be songless when flying wild in the woods, but able and willing to learn the accomplishment when in captivity.

Ceylon must be a most delightful spot wherein to gain fresh experiences, for, in addition to the unrivalled scenery, there is experiences, for, in addition to the unrivalled scenery, there is the further advantage—in point of novelty—that the men and women are so much alike that it is difficult, and at times impossible, to tell one from the other, to such an extent does each sex affect the other in dress, appearance, and manner. India is so well known—at least by book—that Dr. Young's experiences in that quarter of the globe will scarcely attract much attention; but China is almost a sealed volume, and his remarks about Hong Kong and other places are full of interest and novelty. Singapore, too, and Batavia are none too familiar to most readers, and here again the author has "scored." Lastly, St. Helena, though known to everyone as the place of confinement for the "scourge of Europe," is perhaps little more than a nominis umbra to many a person who talks glibly of the mighty Napoleon, and descants upon the life and death of a man of whose days in the island of his forced adoption they are in total ignorance.

The volume under criticism is plain and unpretentious; in fact, it is but a series of well-written letters. But there is the charm of simplicity which seldom fails to attract, and the experiences, for, in addition to the unrivalled scenery, there is charm of simplicity which seldom fails to attract, and the advantage of trustworthiness which is not always to be found where "travellers' lies" are more enticing and more popular.

THE ROMANCE OF LIFE PRESERVATION.+

In his book, entitled "The Romance of Life Preservation." Mr. Burnley has contrived to collect an immense amount of extremely interesting information in regard to a large variety of subjects of a nature not generally familiar to the ordinary reader. We confess, for instance, that, aware as we are of the enormous power of the sea, we had not the slightest conception that a storm could, as it did in December, 1872, at Wick Bay, demolish a mass of masonry set in cement and weighing 350 tons! Neither were we conscious that the duty of the Trinity Board, as originally constituted by Henry VIII., was Trinity Board, as originally constituted by Henry VIII., was merely to pray for the souls of those drowned at sea, and for the lives of those in peril on the great deep. Perhaps some of us do know, but none will suffer any harm from a reminder, that the Life-Boat Institution, out of funds entirely collected by voluntary subscriptions, defrays the cost of a fleet of 293 boats available for any and every emergency—that this noble Society has, since its foundation, saved more than 32,000 lives, and that its expenses are little less than £50,000 a year. Many, too, will read with astonishment that the Romans, great as regards all that pertains to the administration of an Empire, possessed more than 2,000 years ago a body of trained firemen, and that pumps to aid them were invented about the same time. invented about the same time.

Other matters there are in this volume which, if not exactly of the nature of news, are none the less interesting and out of the ordinary way. In this category are the chapters about machinery as applied to the various requirements of everyday life, such as steamers, railways, and the suchlike. Coaches and omnibuses also come in for a share of patronage, and the narrative is intermingled with some curious anecdotes which many will find alike entertaining and novel. War, too, is enlisted into Mr. Burnley's service, and he tells his readers as to the progress in manufacture of weapons wherewith to kill, while, as an antidote, he details the establishment of the various medical and other societies designed to mitigate suffering and promote the comfort of the sick and dying. Lastly, foods supply a by no means dull chapter, and there is some very pleasant chit-chat in regard to the very difficult and vexed question, "what to eat, drink, and avoid."

It may well be imagined that Mr. Burnley has a wide sphere of action. His subjects are numerous, and he has handled them with considerable skill and ability. It is seldom that a book is more readable than the series of romances which he has strung together, and he has once again verified the truth of the old adage that "truth is stranger than fiction."

SELF-TEST SERIES—FRENCH.*

It has been said that there is a continual struggle between the locomotive and the rails. As fast as the one is improved the latter is made better and more suited for high speed and the latter is made better and more suited for high speed and great weight. In like manner there is a perpetual contest between professors and crammers. As fast as the former class increase the difficulties of examinations, the latter persons redouble their efforts to "coach" up the students; but Mr. Berrington seems to aim at some higher standard than merely "dishing the Examiners." His brochure is evidently intended to help those who help themselves, and the way thereto is the simple expedient of summarising the leading peculiarities of the language, so that in whatever direction a difficult question is asked the candidate will not meet his match. This is a is asked the candidate will not meet his match. This is a most admirable notion; and the work is made more valuable by the reprint of a series of papers, which have been given on different occasions, serving to show the style and mode in which these peculiarities are likely to be placed before a student when theory is made to give way to practice. We wish the clever author the success which he well deserves.

SOME HOBBY-HORSES, AND HOW TO RIDE THEM.+

What child is there amongst us who has not during the earlier years of life indulged in the luxury of a hobby-horse? With one it is "stamps," another prefers "coins," a third centres affection upon "seals," while a fourth soars no higher than a simple scrap-book. But what is done, no matter how simple and unpretentious, should be done carefully and well; and Miss Montresor is rightly anxious that persons who take in hand a "collection" should see that intelligence is not wanting to direct and improve. So she gives hints tending to lead young people to reflect, and guide their actions by some what of knowledge. And, really, in teaching "collectors" she has managed to convey a not inconsiderable amount of information in regard to a variety of out-of-the-way matters.

Under the head of Architecture there is ample food for thought in working out the problem how to distinguish and What child is there amongst us who has not during the thought in working out the problem how to distinguish and classify the six styles of English churches—that is, the Angloclassify the six styles of English churches—that is, the Anglo-Saxon, the Norman, the early English, the decorated English, the perpendicular, and the debased English. The most interesting chapters, however, are those which relate to Seals, Heraldry, and Coins. These contain a vast array of really serviceable and interesting knowledge, and explain many of the "whys and wherefores," which are, as a rule, but little understood. It is not generally known, for instance, that on the coinage the heads of successive monarchs are turned in reverse ways, a circumstance which, when old money is much worn, not infrequently affords the only certain means of identification. Who, again, is aware that the "lion" was not always the emblem of England, or, indeed, that it has been used and discarded by successive monarchs from the time of Richard III. onwards, according as pleasure and caprice Richard III. onwards, according as pleasure and caprice dictated? Lastly, it is not a generally familar fact that a regular mint can date back no further than the reign of Edward II., up to which time each sovereign had his "moneyers."

A perusal of Miss Montresor's little volume will serve to instruct alike young and old. It sheds a ray of light upon many a bye-path in this world of instruction; and none will regret the time spent in making their "collections" more artistic, more sensible, and more suitable for the object of intelligent amusement, which such "gatherings together" are intended to promote.

THE FUTURE OF CASHMERE.

ARE we on the eve of another "annexation" policy in India? Or, if the word "annexation" be a word to be avoided for fear of ugly questionings in England, is it possible that the phrase "British Protectorate" may be substituted for it with regard to impending action of the Government of India towards a country long coveted by English men-that of Cashmere? The question may at first glance appear a foolish one, but that at the present time it is not altogether an irrelevant one may be allowed from the fact that articles and letters are appearing in the leading Anglo-Indian papers discussing the propriety of the Paramount Power in India making its influence more directly felt in the administration of the most beautiful and most misgoverned State on one of its frontiers. Mr. Demetrius Boulger, in a thoughtful contribution to the current number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review on "Our Relations with the Himalayan States," takes a more hopeful view of the situation than writers in India, it being his opinion that the reports regarding the unpopularity and harshness of the Maharajah's rule are false, and that any reasons we may have to be dissatisfied with the status quo in Cashmere, apart from any unproved case of administrative tyranny or injustice, are caused by military But as the Maharajah and strategical considerations. "has offered to place his army, his military stores, and the sum of £100,000" at British disposal for the purposes of military defence, Mr. Boulger thinks that the considerations referred to are "deprived of their force." The proferred co-operation, he tells us, "would alone suffice to do everything that is necessary within the limits of Cashmere itself, and thus the weakest point on the Indian frontier would have been rendered secure against hostile attack by the voluntary gift and support of its own Native ruler." The quiet confidence thus expressed will, we fear, raise a smile not only amongst military men who have seen the Maharajah's army and some of his military stores, but amongst all who have a true knowledge of frontier questions in India. Mr. Boulger further holds that British counsels ought to alleviate any evils of the Maharajah's rule, if such exist, without greatly diminishing his authority; "for, after all, what we want him to do is merely to help in constructing two or three railways and to lay down roads. If he were to do this a military occupation of Cashmere would only be necessary when the Russians had gained a position enabling them to crossthe Hindoo Koosh without attracting notice." We wish we could accept this very optimistic view, but we cannot. Mr. Boulger is a scholar who has made deep and diligentresearch into many Indian questions, and his conclusionsdrawn from such research are not to be regarded lightly,. but the proverb which says that "a grain of experience isworth a bushel of conjecture " is rather against him. And those who have any experience of Cashmere under its lateand present ruler know that the co-operation of the Chief of the State is not "all that is necessary to render securethe weakest point on the Indian frontier." Cashmere has for years been governed by the lords of misrule, and itsmiserable inhabitants would to-morrow hail with gladnessthe advent of any Power who could make a change in their condition, for no change could be for the worse with them. For the British Power to simply accept the Maharajah's proferred co-operation without insisting on his making immediate and sweeping administrativereforms, would be only to make the burdens of the peopleheavier, and play into the hands of the Cashmere officials, whose rapacity, tyranny, and evil doings have long blasted. the country as with a curse. A correspondent to an Indian contemporary, writing as one who has a particularly close and peculiarly intimate knowledge of Cashmerian political economy, declares that the only guarantee for internal prosperity and security against Russian intrigues is "a. British Protectorate without the responsibility of annexation." But he adds:-" If I were asked my candid opinion I unhesitatingly state that three-fourths of the entirepopulation would vote for annexation to British India... The extortion practised by Cashmere officials on the lower orders, and the amount of misery undergone by them. uncomplainingly, cannot be realised except by those who like myself, have witnessed it. The people seem to have been so downtrodden by Cashmere officialism as to have become quite apathetic and indifferent to their state. True, the advent of the Viceroy creates some little stiramong them, but the general opinion is that he will falk into bad hands, i.e., be induced to see matters through Cashmere official glasses, when farewell all hope for thepoor of Cashmere! If his Excellency wishes to restore the country to prosperity I would advise him to mistrust every single Cashmere official from the highest to the lowest, and, using his own judgment, call in the assistanceof disinterested British officers to decide what form of government is the best to adopt, so as to relieve the suffering poor from opposition and oppression, and to elevate Cashmere to that position among Native States which her geographical position, fertility, and salubrity entitles her-

Unfortunately the outbreak of cholera in the Valley has for the present delayed Lord Dufferin's visit, but it will be fortunate for Cashmere if he can make his projected tour before he lays down the reins of government. Of course, the outcry would be great in certain influential quarters in England against any attempt at annexation, or even at the experiment being tried of a British protectorate; but it is certain that some strong measure must be adopted to stop the oppression and corruption which are throwing the whole State into anarchy, and the people into distress bordering on despair. If a remedy can be found within the State itself by securing the services of Native officials of tried intelligence and integrity, who would carry out all necessary reforms and take advice and shot a fine solitary bull buffalo.

THERE is a lady in the Central Provinces who has beaten the record of previous "Dianas of the chase." There are woman-killers among men, and man-killers among women; but this lady is locally famous as a slayer of man-killers. Last year she shot her first tiger. This year she has shot two more tigers, and one of these on foot, and has been in at the death of two more, one a savage tigress, which charged the elephant and was shot within a few feet. She also stalked and shot a fine solitary bull buffalo.

THE THAKUR AT HOME, 1888.

O si sic omnes.

He lives amid a curious pile that towers

Above the mud-built dwellings of the herd, Whose friend he is, and chief of earthly powers.
The sorcerer's spell, the Brahman's blighting word
Maintain their sway beside his easy rule,
And no one seems to feel the Thakur's thrall, For, save one modern thing—the Government school— Time-honoured Custom of the lord of all. The sun goes down on droves of goats and kine Streaming within the village gates: the moon Looks on the Thakur boosing o'er his wine, And lulled by beat of drum in endless tune: Contentment holds the village and its chief: The scene is one of grime, but not of grief.

"A stagnant pool"—the traveller may say.—

"A century brings no change where grief and mind Alike are not; none looks beyond to-day, Or knows the outer world; their joys are blind. A man lies down beside the beast he drives And eats his frugal meal without a sigh; Is that the end, for sooth, of human lives Content to live?—content perhaps to die."

Ah well! the outer world is pressing in
And coming nearer to the stagnant pool, And not to know will soon be held a sin-But is the pundit happier than the fool? God help the Thakur when he asks that question-T. It sticks a little in my own digestion.

Norman Thicknesse, Rector of St. Anne's, Limehouse, and of Joshua King, Esq., late of the Bombay Civil Service, as directors, be confirmed; that the following six Directors, who go out by rotation, namely, the Rev. F. E. Wigram, A. H. Baynes, Esq., Major-General A. J. Bruce, Thomas Fowell Buxton, Esq., C. E. Chapman, Esq., and General H. W. Strachan, Esq., for having again kindly audited the accounts of the Institution." In doing so he called the attention of the meeting to the important fact that out of 380 of those who sought shelter under this Home 362 had been conveyed to this sought shelter under this Home 362 had been conveyed to this country by English vessels, showing our vast transactions with the East and commercial enterprise. This being the case he strongly urged the necessity of drawing the attention of the general body of shipowners, merchants, and traders doing business with the East to the claims of the Home.—The Rev. A. W. Cribb seconded this Resolution. In doing so he said that, having been a missionary in China, he had experienced the feeling of being a stronger in a stronger land and and pointed the feeling of being a stranger in a strange land, and pointed out the desirability of keeping up such an Institution as this Home as a haven for these strangers to be kept from the evils of the "crimp" and "land sharks" on their landing on these shores. He strongly contrasted the reception and treatment he had met with in China with those experienced by the Chinese who arrive in this country, and dwelt upon the bad influence it with transfer and treatment the country is the strongly treatment. influence it might work upon others on returning to their own

The Resolution being carried, a collection was made by two young ladies on behalf of the Home.

The second resolution:—"That having now before it the record of the work done by the Strangers' Home, during the record of the work done by the statements contained in the Report year 1887, and also the statements contained in the Report under the head of Receipts and Disbursements which are supported by the audited accounts for the same year, this meeting views with the greatest regret the absence of more liberal support to the Institution from the general body of liberal support to the Institution from the general body of shipowners, merchants, and traders, doing business with the East, as well as from the general Christian and philanthropic community; and it would respectfully, but very earnestly, urge the claims of the Home upon all who have the means, and more especially upon those who owe in large measure the comforts which they enjoy to their connection with India, China, Japan, and other Oriental Countries," was moved by General Sir Orfeur Cavenagh, K.C.S.I., who, in a very concise speech, strongly advocated the claims of the Home, and to call attention to the leading companies, such as the P. and to call attention to the leading companies, such as the P. and O. and British India Steam Navigation Company, and other large companies trading with the East for their support of this Institution.—This resolution was seconded by General H. this Institution.—This resolution was seconded by General H. A. Brownlow, who, in a very interesting speech, called attention especially to the privilege of supporting such a Home, not only a privilege, but a duty of all Christian and philanthropic persons to do so, as we have the words, "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers," and our Master's reward hereafter of "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye have done it unto Me."

The Chairman having briefly addressed the meeting, and the thanks of the meeting being given to Sir R. H. Davies, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., for presiding, and also to the Secretary, J. H. Fergusson, Esq., the Superintendent, Mr. Freeman, the retiring Missionary, Rev. Mr. Small, and the other members of the staff for the able way in which the business of the Home had conducted, and for the unfailing interest taken in it by all, the meeting then terminated in the usual manner.

CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LONDON AND CHINA.

The thirtieth annual general meeting of the shareholders of this bank was held at the Banking House, 65, Old Broad-street, London, on the 17th inst. Mr. J. N. Bullen occupied the chair. The minutes of the extraordinary general meeting held on Feb. 21, and of the half-yearly interim meeting, having been read and confirmed,

The Chairman said: Now, gentlemen, we come to the proceedings of the last half-year, and as a printed copy of the report has been for some days in your hands you will, perhaps, agree to take it as read. I may say we are very pleased to see you here to-day and to submit for your approval these accounts, which, we trust, you will consider satisfactory. The profits have not been so large in the December as in the June half of the year, but this is usually the case, as the first half of the year is the time when business in the East is most active, when, consequently exphance dealings are largest and when generally money consequently, exchange dealings are largest, and when generally money is in most demand and can be most profitably employed. The last half year was, indeed, in some respects an exceptionally unfavourable one, for this reason, that owing to the limited activity in the export trade of India, the small produce shipments, and to other causes the value of money ruled so low that banking profits were much cut down. of India, the small produce shipments, and to other causes the value of money ruled so low that banking profits were much cut down. The minimum rates of the Presidency banks for several weeks in the autumn ruled as low as 3 per cent., which is an abnormally ow rate for India, and for some time the outside market rate in first-class securities was no better than 2 per cent. If you bear in mind that much of our money is fixed deposit money, costing us on an average about 4½ per cent., you will easily see that these are conditions not conducive to large banking profits. Notwithstanding these adverse-circumstances the net profits of the half-year, after providing for bad and doubtful debts, were £33,666, equal to nearly 9 per cent. on our paid-up capital at its par value. For the whole year our net profits have been £86,193, which is equivalent to nearly 11½ per cent. upon the par value of our paid-up capital. Well, this state of things enabled us, I am glad to say, to restore to the reserve fund the £20,000 taken from it at this time last year, and also further to strengthen that account to the extent of £20,000, so that it now stands at the respectable figure of £150,000. (Applause.) I do not know that I need take up your time by going through the items on the balance-sheet, because the figures speak for themselves; but if there is any point on which explanation is desired I shall be very happy to give it. The position of the bank, I am glad to be able to assure you, is satisfactory. (Hear, hear.) We should be better pleased if our profits were not cut so fine, but the competition in Eastern Banking as in everything else is now so great that we have to put up with a great deal that a few years ago we should have thought not very profitable business: in fact, the combut the competition in Eastern Banking as in everything else is now so great that we have to put up with a great deal that a few years ago we should have thought not very profitable business; in fact, the competition is so great that we have to do as our neighbours do and be satisfied with the profits that they are satisfied with. The persistent shrinkage in the gold value of silver, which is not yet arristed, is one of the most embarrassing and perdlexing factors in our calculations, and one with which we have to deal as best we can. Against the consequence of this our best safeguard is, I believe, to strengthen our reserve fund, and thus we have been able to build up a reserve of £150,000 in spite of the adverse circumstances and the difficulties of the last few years gives us much encouragement. If all goes well we shall hope to still further increase the reserve fund at the end of the current year. (Hear, hear.) Before I move the adoption of the report I will say a few words with regard to the renewal of our charter. You will know from the proceedings just read that at the extraordinary meeting held in February last the just read that at the extraordinary meeting held in February last the resolutions carried at our last general meeting were unanimously approved. Well, on the same day our petition was lodged at the Privy approved. Well, on the same day our petition was lodged at the Privy Council, and it is now, we understand, in the hands of the law offices of the Crown. Of course in those Olympic regions—(a laugh)—things do not move very fast; still we have no reason to suppose that there will be any obstacle whatever put in the way of the renewal of the charter on the old terms, and when sufficient time has been allowed to those gentlemen we shall in due course receive an intimation that such is the case; and at the next meeting we shall be working, I hope, under the renewed charter. (Hear.) I now beg to move that the report of the directors and the balance-sheet now presented be received. report of the directors and the balance-sheet now presented be received

Mr. J. Murray Robertson seconded the motion.

The Chairman, replying to observations which fell from Mr. Richardson, Mr. Barber, and another gentleman, said, with regard to the suggestion that they should to some extent increase the dividend instead of adding so much to the reserve fund, he gathered from the appearor adding so much to the reserve fund, he gathered from the appearance of the meeting that they were in favour of continuing the dividend at the modest rate of five per cent., and adding whatever surplus there might be to the reserve fund. With regard to the question as to the present value of the securities they held as compared with the amount credited under that head on Dec. 31 last, there certainly had been a rise in the securities since that time, but those held by the sank were mostly debentures problems. been a rise in the securities since that time, but those held by the bank were mostly debentures, payable one, two, or three years hence, and, of course, they were not subject to the changes that affected securities of a more fluctuating character. The remark which had fallen from one gentleman relative to the reduction of the interest paid on fixed deposit money brought up a subject which was constantly before the Board. Already they had been able to reduce the rate of interest on a good many deposits, but he would remind them that many of the depositors were old friends of theirs, and had stood by them through evil and through good report—(hear, hear); consequently this was a matter which required careful handling. In regard to the allusion to the closing of the branch at Yokohama, that step was taken because it was unprofitable. They had, however, an agency there, which was to them a source of profit, and they had had no reason to regret the change. Mr. Barber's suggestion that a portion of the premises on the ground floor of the bank might be let, and part of the staff transferred to the unoccupied portion of the building upstairs, had already ocen considered by the directors, and if the upper part of the building were not let soon they would endeavour to see what could be done in that direction what could be done in that direction.

The adoption of the report was then unanimously agreed to. Mr. Robertson moved, and Mr. E. J. Daniell seconded, the re-election Mr. J. N. Bullen and Mr. A. Fraser, the retiring directors

The motion was carried nem. con.

Mr. James Jones moved that Mr. George Christian and Mr. F.

Tendron be re-elected auditors, and in doing so expressed himself highly satisfied with the position of the bank, and hoped that the dividend would not be increased until the reserve fund had reached at least £250,000, in order to make the capital intact.

The Chairman observed that a much less sum would be required for that purpose.

Mr. Nelson seconded the proposition, which was put and carried.

A vote of thanks having been accorded to the Chairman, the meeting, which had been of a very harmonious character throughout, terminated.

CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA, AUSTRALIA, AND CHINA.

AND CHINA.

The thirty-fourth ordinary general meeting of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China was held at the Cannon-street Hotel, London, on the 18th inst. Mr. William Paterson occupied the chair. The general balance-sheet and profit and loss account to Dec. 31, 1887, showed that the net profits, with the addition of £6,740 17s. 10d. brought forward, amounted to £89,247 10s. 3d. After providing for bad and doubtful debts, and deducting the interim dividend paid in October last, the present balance stood at £61,247 10s. 3d. Out of this the directors proposed to declare a dividend for the second half of the year at the rate of 7 per cent., add £25,000 to the reserve fund, and carry the balance, £8,247 10s. 3d., forward.

The notice convening the meeting having been read by the Secretary, The Chairman said: I presume you will take the report as read, and we hope that the accompanying account will be considered satisfactory. Seeing, as you are well aware, that the times of late have not been very propitious, it is true that we have not in the course of the year sustained much positive loss by the shrinkage in the value of silver; and as we have been able to earn £25,000 in addition to the 7 per cent. dividends which you have been receiving for the previous six years, we think it right to transfer that sum to the reserve, thereby increasing that important fund to £225,000. (Hear, hear.) the 7 per cent. dividends which you have been receiving for the previous six years, we think it right to transfer that sum to the reserve, thereby increasing that important fund to £225,000. (Hear, hear.) Regarding the balance-sheet, I think I need only remark that the comparatively larger figures shown therein fail to indicate the increased volume of our business. The large cash balances in hand on Dec. 31 last—£1,407,217—are considerably more than we like to see unemployed at any time, but it is, I may say, an accidental illustration of the strength of our position. (Hear, hear.) Although all the items in our account appear at the current exchange and value of the day, yet silver which we have to handle at our branches, is a matter of daily perplexity. We have faint hopes, however; that something may be done in the matter. (Hear, hear.) The Royal Commission which has been sitting for some time has not yet issued its report, which is looked forward to with anxious interest by all who are interested in silver-using countries, and it is to be hoped that something will be done for our great Indian Empire, the finances of which are becoming more and more disorganised by the debasement of its ancient rupee. Others are also suffering largely—I mean those who are doing so much for the development of the country. (Hear, hear.) Probably you may have observed that there was an important and interesting meeting at Manchester a short time ago upon this subject. It was then shown that our manufacturers were suffering very seriously, and there was an apparent determination on their part to make themselves heard, if some arrangement is not come to for an international valuation of silver fixing its relative value to gold. It is understood that this country is the main, if not the only, obstacle in the way of achieving that very desirable end. (Hear, hear.) I do not think I have anything more to say with regard to our business, which, as I have said, shows a gradual important increase. Any questions which you have to put, how make him a very valuable colleague for us, and I am quite sure that he will be unanimously elected at our next meeting, in accordance with the articles of association. I now propose the first resolution, which is: "That the report now presented, together with the balance sheet, and profit and loss account, be approved and adopted."

Mr. Levita seconded the resolution, which was heartily supported by Mr. James Drake, and carried unanimously.

The Chairman then moved: "That a dividend at the rate of seven per cent. per annum (free of income-tax) for the half-year ended Dec. 31 last be now declared, payable on and after the 25th inst.

Mr. Christian seconded the proposition, which was also carried without dissent.

out dissent.

On the motion of the Chairman, two resolutions, one seconded by Mr. Whittall, and the other by Mr. Stewart, were passed re-electing Mr. William Christian, and Mr. John H. Gwyther directors.

Mr. William Vanner and Mr. Maurice N. Girdlestone were, on the motion of Mr. Melcher, seconded by Col. F. C. Evelegh, re-elected auditors for the ensuing year.

Dr. Drysdale proposed, and the Rev. M. A. Nisbet seconded, a vote of thanks to the directors, and Mr. James Drake proposed, and Dr. Drysdale seconded, a vote of thanks to the staff. The motions were

The Chairman, in returning thanks on behalf of himself and his colleagues, remarked that it had been well said that the difficulties connected with India and China Banking were great, and not likely to be diminished until some arrangement was come to with reference to the silver question, which could only be regarded as an incubus and a great drawback to the profitable working of the institution. As regards the staff, he said it would give him great pleasure to convey to them the thanks of the shareholders, for he might add that the bank was undoubtedly very well served.

Mr. John Howard Gwyther, on behalf of the staff, responded to the vote of thanks, remarking that they had many difficulties and stumbling blocks to contend with, and were glad to have this expression of the shareholders' appreciation of their efforts.

the shareholders' appreciation of their efforts.

THE LONDON DOCK COMPANIES.

EAST AND WEST INDIA.

An extraordinary general meeting of the proprietors of the East and West India Dock Company was held on the 17th inst., at the Dockhouse, Billiter-street, for the purpose of considering "A Bill to authorise an amalgamation or working union of the undertakings of the Loudon and St. Katharine Docks Company and the East and West India Dock Company."

India Dock Company."

the Loudon and St. Katharine Docks Company and the East and West India Dock Company."

Mr. R. A. Hankey presided. The meetings of the two companies, he said, were being held simultaneously, and this was somewhat inconvenient for those who were proprietors in both companies. The meetings, however, though held for the same purpose, were in a sense antagonistic to each other, and there were many considerations which had led to the meetings being held at the same time. The Bill in its present form differed very much from the Bill at present deposited, but he did not propose to lay it before them as a good bargain for that company and a bad bargain for the London company, for that would be unfair to the other company, who had been their competitors in the past, but to-morrow must be their partners. The Findlay-Oakley scheme arranged that the East and West Company's share of the profits should gradually increase until it reached 33 per cent., where it should remain. In the present scheme time was no element of consideration in the division of profits, but the basis of division was 69 per cent. to the other company, and 31 per cent. to the East and West India Company. That, however, only applied to profit up to £475,000, and after that all profits were divided equally between the two companies. Under the present scheme the dividends of the two companies were equal at a profit of £650,000. Under the scheme originally proposed they would not have been equal until the profits reached the almost impossible total of £1,200,000. If profits eventually reached £650,000 the dividends to each company would be 3½ per cent. Under the original scheme they would not have had 3½ per cent. until the profits reached £710,000, while the London and St. Katharine Comalmost impossible total of £1,200,000. If profits eventually reached £650,000 the dividends to each company would be 3½ per cent. Under the original scheme they would not have had 3½ per cent. until the profits reached £710,000, while the London and St. Katharine Company would have had 3½ per cent. when the profits were £610,000. As some guide to possible profits, he might mention that for three years preceding the active competition, the total profits of the two companies were—in 1883, £448,921; in 1884, £466,657; and in 1885, £447,308. Even in these years the companies were to some extent competing with one another. This competition will be done away with, and, having regard to the fact that the larger the business carried on the greater was the chance of increasing it, the figures of 1885 ought to be improved upon. There was also the saving to be effected by amalgamation—estimated at £100,000—so that even a net receipt of £500,000, giving them each 3½ per cent, was not impossible. In comparatively recent years the profits have been much greater than in the years 1883 to 1885. As to the surplus lands question, the present scheme placed the entire disposal of the lands in the hands of the company owning them, instead of making the sale or letting subject to the consent of the joint committee. There were 400 acres of land at Tilbury. If these realised the very low price of £1,000 an acre, it would increase their dividend by ½ per cent., and if it realised £2,000 an acre by 1½ per cent. This might mean that their dividend might be equal to that of the London and St. Katharine Company long before the joint profits realised £650,000. These were the most important features of the scheme. The directors had no hesitation in recommending the Bill for acceptance as a just, fair, and equitable settlefeatures of the scheme. The directors had no hesitation in recommending the Bill for acceptance as a just, fair, and equitable settlement of a very difficult question.

The Bill was then read and explained by Dr. Freshfield, the solicitor to the company, and a long discussion, lasting for over an hour, ensued.

The Chairman replied to the points raised, and the meeting, on a show of hands, approved the Bill, with three dissentients.

London and St. Katharine.

An extraordinary general meeting of this Dock Company was held on the 17th inst. at the Dock-house, Leadenhall-street, Mr. A. G. Sandeman in the chair, to consider a similar Bill to that submitted at the meeting of the East and West India Dock Company.

Mr. E. F. Turner, the Company's solicitor, in explaining the Bill, said the working union was to commence as from Jan. 1 next. One-third of the directors were to retire annually. In November next the number of the directors would be reduced to not exceeding 21 nor less than 15, and hereafter the proprietors could further reduce or increase the number, the maximum, however, not to exceed 24, and the minimum not to be less than 12. Corresponding provisions were made as to the other company, in whose case, however, the maximum and minimum were to be 18 and 12, and ultimately 24 and 9. He then described the other leading features of the Bill, set forth above then described the other leading features of the Bill, set forth above at the meeting of the East and West India Company, and went on to say that power was given to the Company to create additional capital of £150,000 in new Ordinary or Preference stock, and also to borrow on mortgage an amount not exceeding £50,000.

on mortgage an amount not exceeding £50,000.

The Chairman thought it would have struck the proprietors, from the solicitor's explanations, that the Bill had been drawn with great care. He would propose the following resolution:—"Resolved, that the Bill as introduced into the House of Commons be approved, subject to such additions and amendments as the directors may think fit to make therein, and as may be approved by Parliament; and that the amendments now submitted and proposed to be made in the saidl Bill in Committee, be approved." Bill in Committee, be approved.

Mr. C. M. Norwood seconded the motion, and a prolonged discussion ensued.

The Chairman, on putting the resolution to the meeting, said that there was one hand held up against it. Unless that proprietor could be induced to withdraw his opposition, they would have to go through all the trouble of a ballot. He therefore put the motion again, and noone voting against it, he declared it carried unanimously.

Miscellaneous.

THE Madras Mail of April 4th says:—"For domestic reasons Captain B. D. Plummer, of the Mysore Gold Mining. Company, proceeds to England from Madras on the 8th inst. in the Khedive. He has been in charge of the Company's mine at Kolar since February, 1884, at which date the Company had spent all but £12,000 of its capital of £135,000; had pany had spent all but £12,000 of its capital of £135,000; had obtained no gold; and its £1 shares were unsaleable at 2s. 6d. In June, 1884, he cut rich ore, and since then he has obtained 40,000 ozs. of bar gold, worth about £156,000, or 22½ lakhs of rupees. He will reach London in time to attend the Company's annual meeting, and it is hoped that he will renew his engagement with the Company, and be back at Kolar in the autumn. Lord Ribblesdale, a Director of the Company, who lately spentive weeks at Kolar leaves Rombay next Friday for five active weeks at Kolar, leaves Bombay next Friday for England, and will have a great deal of an encouraging nature to say to his co-proprietors at the meeting.

THE following are accurate details of the fatal accident-which occurred on the Bengal-Nagpur Railway between Darekassa and Salekassa stations early on the morning of the 25th ult. :—There was, it seems, no collision between goods trains. The facts are these: Between the above stations there is a steep incline, and it is usual to have a pilot engine in the rear steep incline, and it is usual to have a pilot engine in the rear of trains. It appears that the train was travelling at a high speed, and the brakesman of the front brake-van applied his brake, intending to check the speed. The guard in the rear, probably thinking something amiss, applied his brake, and the driver of the leading engine appears to have brought his steambrake to bear. This caused the front brake to heave upward. The brakesman was killed outright, being mutilated beyond recognition. Two men who were in the brake with him are reported to have escaped uninjured. There were altogether thirty-one waggons detailed including a waggon that rolled thirty-one waggons detailed, including a waggon that rolled down the side after leaving the rails.

It is beyond question, says the Times of India, that exchange commands much attention at the moment. To the change commands much attention at the moment. To the family remitter it is crushing, and we can imagine with what avidity the paper is opened up-country to see the current value of the rupee in English money. To the Government of India it must be a most anxious problem, but it must be admitted that nothing is done to try and arrest the fall. In the concluding week of March, 50 lakhs of Councils were sold. 50 lakhs were offered on Wednesday, and 50 lakhs are to be offered next week. On Wednesday Government gave Bills at 1s. 4\frac{2}{3}d., and Transfers at 1s. 4\frac{7}{2}-16d. The 50 lakhs offered were given and double was asked for. Government in their Budget estimate calculated at 1s. 4\frac{2}{2}-32d., and their first sale brings them in 1s. 4\frac{2}{3}d. The Budget figures must be first sale brings them in 1s. 43d. The Budget figures must be purely nominal, for, in spite of the low rate realised, there is purely nominal, for, in spite of the low rate realised, there is no attempt to reduce the amount to be sold next week. Government may be trying to find out how low Silver will compete in the Council Bills. We are now approaching 1886 prices at a walk compared with a run then. Silver is abundant, and we fail to see where we are to pause if the export season forces us down instead of up. That a run will come presently is possible, but when it will come or what it will be when it does come, or even that it will come at all is more than any does come, or even that it will come at all, is more than any one can or dare say at present.

CERTAIN London papers are excited over what has been called "A gigantic City intrigue—or exploiting the Nizam"—the scandal referred to being the floating of the Hyderabad Deccan Company. One of these papers has the following:—"The infamous Deccan plot is coming out as we anticipated. The story of the purchase of the shares in the puffed railway speaks for itself. The poor young Nizam was induced to purchase £131,250 worth of shares at 12, the price having since allen to 8. Only a month before the Nizam made the purchase of shares at a premium of 20 per cent, and at the lithest price that he was willing to pay of their nominal value, the actual sum which this wonderful company had apent in the Deccan was £6,411, the greater part of which was in "establishment charges." Meanwhile the Sirdar who drove the lishment charges." Meanwhile the Sirdar who drove the bargain has become an extremely wealthy man, owning huge blocks of houses in Calcutta, and rising from an absolute parvenu into a great magnate. The disgraceful part of the business is the mysterious connection between the Decan job and the poor Nizam's Jubilee gift to the Indian Government. Of this more anon." Against this, however, must be placed the following from the Times City article:—"We have received a telegram from Mr. W. Watson, now at Constantinople, informing us that he is returning to London immediately to reply to the allegations made regarding his connection with this company." this company.

A GERMAN correspondent, writing to the Bombay papers, A GERMAN correspondent, writing to the Bombay papers, says:—"I wish I could express better what I feel, but I am sure all my countrymen will join me in saying that we are deeply touched and feel grateful for the sympathetic manner in which the English nation showed their good-will towards the Fatherland, and their admiration of the great good man that has passed away." He then refers to "the service of mourning in Bombay, the ninety-one minute guns fired at the principal stations in India, and the English newspapers, with their leading articles, all proclaimed loudly throughout India that the whole race, which governs this beautiful country, that the whole race, which governs this beautiful country, admired him whom we loved," the late German Emperor.

THE Secretary of State in the Foreign Department in replying to General Rungbeer Jung Bahadoor's letter to the Viceroy offering his services with a view to a peaceful settlement of the difficulty with Thibet and Sikkim, courteously informs him that the Government of India is sensible of his friendly disposition, and although unable to avail themselves of the help offered, they thank him for the goodwill shown towards them.

A HORRIBLE encounter which beats Mr. Greenwood's famous A HORRIBLE encounter which beats Mr. Greenwood's famous "man and dog fight" is reported from Lahore. The local paper states:—"A dangerous and exciting occurrence—a hand to-hand struggle with a baboon—took place near the Lahore Central Jail. A European warder, named Austin, was aroused at a late hour by knocks at his door, and, thinking there were thieves, he went out of the room stealthily to secure them by a detour. On finding nobody, and returning, he saw a large-sized baboon seated on a round table, where the lamp was burning, warming himself by its flame. Before he could retire the animal saw and followed him and attacked him with great ferocity, tearing and biting at him. Unable to escape. Austin ferocity, tearing and biting at him. Unable to escape, Austin had to face his assailant, and a desperate struggle ensued; the man eventually succeeding in killing the baboon. The animal belonged to the contractor of the Jail, Nehal Chand. Austin has been badly wounded, and is said to be in a precarious state."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE CF

INDIA.

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing monthly (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to justice to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

Wanted agents, at home and abroad, to obtain orders for watches and jewellery on our new instalment system, by weekly or monthly payments. Most beneficial to subscribers and agents. Also trustworthy men wanted in every ship, regiment, and battery to act as agents, to enable naval and military men to secure good, reliable watches at a small profit above the actual cost. Naval and military agents when leaving the service, desirous of being appointed district agents or travellers, are invited to apply for the post; but preference will be given to those agents who procure the most orders during their agency in the service. The means of earning a good income were never before placed so easily in the reach of intelligent, energetic naval or military men retiring from the service. Terms and catalogues free.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Rogimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the Frensh, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

. . . . The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name —J. W. KAYE, Athenseum Club, June 23 1872.

The Calcutta R view has given us valuable articles on the army. Sen e from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophesy of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C.-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

.... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout ts career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westmineter

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, APRIL 30, 1888.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 13th April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 11th April; and from Calcutta to the 10th April.

THE Viceroy's visit to Kashmir has been abandoned, owing to the outbreak of cholera in the Srinagar district.

LATEST news from Jummu states that cholera is extending along the Punch, apparently following in the track of the Maharajah's camp. The last case reported comes from Rajori. The Maharajah reached Baramula on the 4th, and it is to be hoped that the disease will be shaken off before the court reach Srinagar.

THE Amir really means to shape his course for Kabul very soon, for his household has already started for Gundamuk, and but one wife with eight attendants remain in the pleasant gardens of Jellalabad. There will be rejoicing among the local tribesmen when Abdur Rahman strikes his

AYUB KHAN was to leave Persia for India on the 23rd April. Colonel Mockler, the Resident at Muscat, escorts the Afghan Sirdar.

THE B.I.S. N. steamer Sirsa has been chartered for the purpose of bringing the followers of Ayub Khan from Bussorah. She has gone into the Government Dock for the necessary alterations, as she is being fitted with first-class accommodation for a hundred passengers. The Sirsa was to leave Bombay on the 14th April.

A TORNADO swept over Eastern Bengal on the 27th March, resulting in extensive destruction to life and property. Seventy persons are reported to have been killed and three hundred wounded; buildings were demolished, trees uprooted, and the damage done is estimated at a crore of rupees.

A TOWN in the Bhugulpore district, Bengal, was almost tirely destroyed by fire on Wednesday. The loss of entirely destroyed by fire on Wednesday. property is said to be immense.

A LETTER has been published from the Government of India vindicating Sir Lepel Griffin's policy in Bhopal against the aspersions of the Amrita Bazar Patrika.

LIEUTENANT FARQUHAR, R.A., has died from the effects of a collision at polo at Neemuch.

Some of the relatives of Tantia Bheel, the notorious dacoit, have been arrested in Indore.

Mr. Henvey will act as Agent to the Governor-General in Central India during the absence of Sir Lepel Griffin, the vacancy at Jeypore being filled by Colonel Prideaux. As Colonel Prideaux is, however, going on furlough, Col. Peacock, from Ulwar, will act at Jeypore.

Six truck loads of wild animals, purchased by the Amir in Calcutta, have arrived at Lahore on their journey to

THE question of the reorganisation of the Punjab Veterinary Department and the Lahore Veterinary School is now before the Military Department of the Government of India.

THE Agricultural and Veterinary Conference at Delhi terminated on the 4th instant, and the proceedings will now be communicated to the several Local Governments who sent representatives to the meeting. Sir Edward Buck, who presided at the Delhi gathering, travels northwards before proceeding to Simla.

THERE is no truth in the statement that the Government of India has recommended Rai Jai Perkas Lall, Bahadar, for an appointment in Kashmir.

COLONEL CLIFFORD, Commissary-General for transport, obtains the command of the 2nd Punjab Cavalry at the end of the month, and will be succeeded by Colonel Laughton, C.B., now Chief Commissariat Officer, Burma Field Force.

THE quantity of cotton exported from the ports of Lower Burma during the month of February last was 3,987 cwt., valued at Rs. 85,189.

GENERAL SIR R. Low will officiate in the Burma command during Sir George White's three months absence.

THE ostrich farm, which has been maintained by Mr. Wilson at Delhi with more or less success during the pastfew years, is about to be abandoned. He has withdrawn the application made by him to the Punjab Government for a lease of land.

Mr. D. J. ZEMIN, of Messrs. Newman and Co., has been elected to represent the Trades' Association on the Calcutta Port Commission.

Mr. Carlo Bartoli, cashier of the Madras Railway, has drowned himself.

Indian Gold Mining Shares.—Most of these Shares on Saturday were more or less flat. Mysore and Nundydroog declined 1-16, and Ooregum 6d., but Nine Reefs rose 1s: Mysore Shares were last quoted 3 1-16 to 3 3-16, Nundydroog 1½ to 1½, Indian Consolidated 9s. to 10s., Balaghat-Mysore (15s. paid) 8s. to 10s., ditto fully paid (£1) 13s. to 15s., Ooregum 15s. to 16s., ditto Preference 15s. to 16s., Devala-Moyar 5s. 6d. to 6s. 6d., Nine Reefs 17s. to 19s., Mysore Reefs (£1 paid) 4s. to 5s., Mysore-Wynaad (17s. 6d. paid) 2s. to 3s., Indian Glenrock 5s. 6d. to 6s. 6d., Gold Fields of Mysore 1 to 1½, New South-East Wynaad 3s. to 4s., Indian Gold Mines (of Glasgow) 5s. to 6s., Wentworth (17s. paid) 5s. to 7s., Wynaad Perseverance, 3s. to 3s. 6d., and Mysore West (fully paid) 4s. to 5s.

BUDA-PESTH, HUNGARY.—The English visitor to the beautiful metropolis of Hungary cannot fail to be impressed with the variety of its natural aperient waters. A short distance from Buda-Pesth is the Æsculap Spring, situated in the centre of a large plain, the aperient water from which has for many years been celebrated for the valuable medicinal properties which it contains; the sulphates of sodium and magnesium, according to the analysis of Professor Johann Molnars, being: greater in quantity than those of any other natural aperient water hitherto discovered. Æsculap water being almost "tasteless," it is invaluable for women and children, and in all magness where a sofa certain and pleasant aperient is required. With reference to the outbreak of cholera among emigrants proceeding to Assam, it is understood that, should necessity arise, the Local Government proposes to prohibit temporarily the emigration of labourers from Bengal to Assam.

A TELEGRAM states that the Duke of Orleans' shooting party have killed their twenty-first tiger.

The railway authorities are of opinion that the recent frequency of attempts to derail trains on the N.W. and "tasteless," it is invaluable for women and children, and in all cases where a safe, certain and pleasant aperient is required. It has also been found to be the most suitable aperient for prolonged use, and is of especial value in all affections of the stomach, liver and kidneys. The leading physicians invariably prescribe Æsculap in all complaints for which aperient waters are necessary, and it is to be obtained of all chemists. The Lancet says:—"This water contains the sulphates of magnesium and sodium in unusually large quantities. It is an admirable aperient water—one of the most powerful, indeed, that we have examined, and may be used with perfect confidence." The wholesale agents are Ingram and Royle, 52, Farringdon-street, London, E.C.

NOTES.

THE news from India by to-day's Overland Mail is uneventful The Viceroy has altogether, it would appear, abandoned the idea of visiting Cashmere, as cholera was still raging there. Cholera, says one of the Mofussil papers, seems to be the only personal enemy that Lord Dufferin has in India. It seriously interfered with his tour in Beluchistan last autumn, and it has now prevented him from taking a pleasant trip to Murree and Srinagar.

WE have so frequently had the painful duty of commenting upon the disloyal tone of some of the Native papers of Bengal, especially of that of the Amrita Bazar Patrika, that it is with unfeigned pleasure we read the following, taken from that regarding Lady Dufferin:—

It is a matter of great pleasure, that in the confusion about the merits and demerits of the administration of Lord Dufferin Lady Dufferin was not forgotten. We know there is difference of opinion about the utility of her scheme, but there cannot be any two opinions about her philanthropy. She has laboured hard, laboured when other ladies would have never cared to move a muscle, to further the progress of her scheme. It would have been ungrateful on our part not to acknowledge the labour that she has taken on our behalf. What a vast deal of good European ladies in India can do if they follow in the wake of Lady Dufferin and perform humane acts without interested motives! Lady Dufferin had uphill work before her, because most of the lady philanthropists who lad preceded her had ulterior objects of spreading Christianity. It fook much time and labour for Lady Dufferin to persuade people that she was no propagandist in disguise.

THE latest complaint which the Bengali Babús have against Lord Dufferin is that he carries bad luck with him wherever he goes. One of these intelligent creatures writes to that effect to an Anglo-Indian paper published in Calcutta, and the Editor not only publishes the letter but gravely discusses the subject of it, and invites its Native contemporaries to say "whether such an impression really exists amongst the people." There is only one English newspaper in Calcutta which would notice such nonsense—and that one cannot, perhaps, help itself, for it must conciliate Babú. But here is what the Babú writes of Lord Dufferin:—

In Calcutta his presence has brought large fires, destroying property of great value. His Excellency went to Seoraphuli, and the large bazaar at that place was burnt down. He went to Tarkessur, and there also was the bazaar burnt down. When he visited Allahabad the Secretariat buildings were destroyed by fire, while at Mian Meer a part of the cantonament barracks were burnt down. At Uttarpara a boat was capsized, Dr. Salzer and other gentlemen falling into the river, the Doctor being rescued with difficulty from a watery grave. I could multiply instances of the kind, but need not do so.

The Editor of the paper in which this letter is published says of the writer that "he is an educated man, and writes with manifest honesty." What of the Editor?

The Secretary of State for India in Council gives notice that he will be prepared to receive at the Bank of England, on Thursday, May 3rd, 1888, at or before two o'clock, tenders for a loan of £7,000,000, on security of stock to be created under the provisions of the Act 51 Vict., c. 5, in order to provide funds for the purchase of the property of the Oudh and Rohilkund Railway Company, and for the discharge of such of the debentures of that company as fall due in the year 1888. The stock will bear interest at the rate of three pounds per cent. per annum, payable quarterly at the Bank of England, on January 5th, April 5th, July 5th, and October 5th in each year, the first dividend being payable on July 5th next; and will be consolidated with the India Three per Cent. Stock now existing, which is not redeemable until October 5th, 1948, but will be redeemable at par on or after that day, upon one year's previous notice having been given. Tenders may be for the whole or any part of such loan, but not for sums of less than £100 stock, and must state what amount of money will be given for every £100 of the said stock.

OF course the loan will be readily taken up, and so would a larger amount should the Secretary of State require to raise it to advance to guaranteed companies, instead of authorising them to raise debenture capital under his guarantee. But on this matter of guaranteed lines the Statesman truly says that a most deplorable error marked the Government connection with them from the first, whilst the genius of ill-fortune seems to have followed its connection with them since:—

In the most lighthearted way in the world, the East India Company took the risk of exchange upon itself in the remittance not only of the Railway capital subscribed in London, at 1s. 10d. per rupee, but by engaging to remit the dividends thereon, when they began to earn any, at the same rate. An operation that would have staggered all the Exchange Banks of the East, if undertaken by them in concert, was entered upon by the Home Government without suspicion of what its meaning might eventually become. It lost heavily in both ways. It gave the railways a rupee for every 1s. 10d. they paid into the Home Treasury when the rupee was worth 2s. for fifteen years on end, and then had to give 1s. 1od. for every rupee earned by the lines in India when the rupee was worth but 1s. 5d. or 1s. 6d., as now. The mischief was done before the public came to know of it, but it was pointed out in 1861 how fatal the step would prove to be.

A WRITER in the Civil and Military, who praises Sir Frederick Roberts's late speech on temperance in the army as "a splendid, noble and daring speech, which should be printed in letters of gold and hung up in a prominent place in every barrack-room," comes forward, nevertheless, with a "plea for drink," which he considers ought to have weight with the military authorities under certain circum! stances. He would always give the soldier a spirituous drink before a battle. "I hold that a commander who took his troops into action without having a supply of whisky, brandy or rum at hand was almost criminally negligent. Waterloo was won by the effect of brandy and rum as well as by the great Duke and the men. I have been told by an old Waterloo veteran that on the day of that memorable engagement, which changed the fate of Europe, even the very horses had whole bottles of rum poured down their throats." This if it had been penned in what is known as This if it had been penned in what is known as "chaff" would have been foolish enough, but penned in seriousness, as it has been, it is more than foolish—it is mischievous, for it inculcates the bad moral that the British soldier must have a stimulant in the shape of some intoxicating liquor before he can fight and conquer.

This is not only untrue and an unjust reflection on Tommy Atkins's courage, but it is apt to injure the cause of temperance in the army, which Sir Frederick Roberts so ably advocated in his address at Meerut. And it will also give the Natives cause to speak further evil of the British soldier in India. Sobriety in the ranks has been a great and gratifying feature of military progress during the past ten years, and nothing should be said or done to weaken the good result which has been achieved. But if it be accepted as fact that it would be almost criminal in a commander to take his men into action without beforehand dosing them with spirituous liquor Tommy Atkins may come to the conclusion that such stimulation may serve equally well previous to going in for other duties besides The whole article, to which the Lahore paper gives the prominence of big type and leading position, and the gist of which is to argue that "drink is one of the physical aids in a battle," is stupid and mischievous, not-withstanding that it concludes with some namby-pamby moralisms about "cultivating the soldier's mind so that he may be brave under any circumstances" It could not have been written by a true soldier.

THE incidents quoted in connection with the battle of Waterloo have been drawn from the imagination or impudence of the writer. But the same thing—namely, that he had to be "primed" for action—has been said of the British soldier by his enemies regarding many battles which he fought and won on an empty stomach, and without even water to quench his thirst. Under such conditions he managed to hold the heights of Inkerman on that Sunday when the struggle and the slaughter were as fierce as that of Waterloo; and the records of the Indian Mutiny tell of many a weary march and "hard foughten" day when his endurance and courage needed no other stimulation than his own innate determination to do his duty.

BOMBAY is in a great state of excitement at the prospect of Sind being removed from the jurisdiction of the Bombay Government, and the local Press is eloquent in denouncing what it calls "this act of spoliation." The Times of India advises all the associations in the island to arise and protest against the dismemberment, which, it says, strikes a mortal blow at the future growth and prosperity of the kingdom of Bombay. The Bombay Gazette declares that the superiority of the Bombay Civil Service will be endangered, and that a distinctly narrow experience will await the civilian of that Presidency in the future. "It is not too soon," says the indignant Editor, "to point out that a curtailment of the area of this Presidency by forty-eight thousand square miles, and that of its population by two and a half millions, would strengthen the case of those who may some day insist that the Governorship of Bombay ought to be reduced to a Lieutenant-Governorship, a change that would bring with it a very undesirable loss of prestige, though the Civil Service might welcome an arrangement which would present something higher than a membership of Council as the supreme goal of a civilian's ambition.

It is not "too soon"; it is too late. The Press and people of Bombay surely know that the step in question has been under discussion for the last ten or twelve years. The dignity of the island Government may be a little ruffled, and some of the loaves and fishes which have hitherto fallen to the Bombay Civil Service may be lost to it, but the gain to India will be that the whole of the North-West Frontier will be placed under one common administration. But no injury will be done to the Bombay. administration. But no injury will be done to the Bombay Civil Service if the modest request of the Bombay Press be conceded, which is, that by way of compensation for the loss of Sind, the rich grain-growing districts of the Central Provinces be incorporated with the Bombay Presidency.

SIR GEORGE CAMPBELL would have condensation in Parliamentary Blue Books, and is against all verbosity and redundancy in official reports What about Parliamentary speeches almost as long as Kirkaldy itself? Is example to follow on precept? O! si sic omnia.

THE DECCAN MINING COMPANY.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 29. The following is an important Minute by the Nizam's Prime Minister, Sir Asman Jah, on what is generally described by the Indian Press as "The Hyderabad Mining Scandal." It is anticipated that the Sirdar's explanation will shortly be published, and it is only fair that this explanation should be duly considered before a judgment is arrived at adverse to the Sirdar, or to the administration of the Residency authorities at Hyderabad:—

at Hyderabad:—

"On the 7th of November, 1882, Messrs. Watson and Stewart submitted a proposal to the Nizam's Government for the acquisition of a monopoly of mining rights in His Highness's dominions. On the 10th of January, 1883, the late Sir Salar Jung minuted on this proposal, and decided to sanction the concession on the terms, inter alia, that the concession-naires should raise a limited liability company, with a capital of £1,000,000, and expend at least £100,000 in the development of the mines. On the 15th of March, 1883, the Government of India approved generally the terms of the concession. On the 30th of March, 1883, the Council of Regency authorised the Sirdar Diler-ul Mulk to proceed to England (a) to carry out the suggestions made by the Government of India enumerated, and (b) to act on all instructions received from the late Minister. On the 5th of July, 1883, the Secretary of State for India authorised the Sirdar to open negotiations.

'A revised draft, d'ffering in some details from the terms of the original proposal, was prepared in England, under the directions of the Sirdar, by a committee of legal and mining experts, though nothing was said as to who the gentlemen were. The Sirdar telegraphed to the Senior Administrator in Hyderabad that he had arranged the mining scheme on the basis of his instructions. That draft I have not seen.

"Writing on the 16th of December, 1884, on behalf of Messrs. Watson and Stewart, their solicitor, Mr. Winter, asked the Minister that the stipulation of the draft of the concession, providing that the proposed company should subscribe £500,000.

the Minister that the stipulation of the draft of the concession, providing that the proposed company should subscribe £500,000, of which £100,000 should be actually paid up, should be waived in favour of the stipulation contained in his client's original proposal that the nominal capital of the company should be £1,000,000, of which £100,000 should be expended. "'I would submit,' writes Mr. Winter, 'that the first issue of shares be for £100,000, of which a proportion—say £25,000—shall be paid up at once, and the balance in calls at short notice as and when required.'
"This is a most important statement. It fixes the concessionaires with the knowledge and acceptance of the stipulation of a first issue. On the 17th of December, 1884, Sir Salar Jung informed Mr. Winter that he could not accede to any departure from the agreement as drafted in England, which tion of a first issue. On the 17th of December, 1884, Sir Salar Jung informed Mr. Winter that he could not accede to any departure from the agreement as drafted in England, which he professed his readiness to accept if signed by the concessionaires. To this Mr. Winter agreed by a letter dated the 7th of January, 1885. In a long letter to the Resident, dated the 14th of January, 1885, Sir Salar Jung, reviewing the situation, says, 'I have consented that the amount to be subscribed shall be reduced from £500,000 to £250,000;' but he insisted upon £100,000 being paid up on the formation of the company. On the 6th of May, 1885, the Resident informed the Minister that the Government of India had had the draft agreement under consideration, and enclosed in his letter two memoranda from the Supreme Government in connection therewith. 'These memoranda,' the Resident added, 'are put so clearly that I have no need further to elucidate them. The memoranda in question embody the following recommendations:—The capital of the company to be not less than £1,000,000; the first issue of shares to amount to £100,000, of which £25,000 should be actually paid; and the concessionaires to be released and the caution-money of £100,000 to be returned on the company agreeing to the terms of the concession as drafted. The reasons for these recommendations are thus explained:—'Clause 2—the first issue of shares to be reduced from £250,000 to £100,000, and the paid-up capital from £100,000 to £25,000. This is done to meet the immediate requirement for the opening of the Singareni coalfields, which, judging from the circumstances of the existing coal companies in Bengal, can be efficiently worked with the subscribed capital. The amount of the proposed nominal capital is left as originally drafted in Clause 1, as that contemplated a further issue of shares to be made in the event of iron or steel works being started in Singareni, or the mineral wealth of the province being developed in other sites.'

"In recapitulating the various proposals province being developed in other sites."

"In recapitulating the various proposals Sir Salar Jung points out, in a letter written to the Resident, and dated the 10th of August, 1885, that the Government does not feel justified in reducing the first issue of shares to less than £150,000, or the paid-up capital to less than £75,000. The Resident supported in the main the medifactions quested her supported in the main the modifications suggested by the Minister, and the Government of India ultimately accepted

"On the 7th of January, 1886, a formal agreement for the concession was signed between the Government of Hyderabad, by the ex-Minister on their behalf, and by the concessionnaires. This was subsequently ratified by the Secretary of State for India. It is not clear who drew up this agreement, nor does anything show that Sir Salar Jung had, before accepting it, the benefit of any legal advice, nor is it clear on what instructions and by whom given the agreement took shape. Some inkling as to the true state of the circumstances may be gathered, however, from the following facts. The Sirdar was sent to England in 1883 to negotiate a mining concession. The late Sir Salar Jung had stipulated merely that a company should be formed with a capital of £1,000,000, but apparently had not stipulated for a first issue. The Sirdar had an agreement drawn up by a committee of legal and mining experts, which may possibly be the concession of the 7th of January, 1886, or the basis of that concession. In 1883 the Sirdar telegraphed from England to the Senior Administrator in Hyderabad that he had arranged a mining scheme on the basis of his instructions. It may be that the concession of the 7th of January, 1886, is silent as to any first issue because it was drafted to meet the instructions of 1883, which said nothing about a first issue. But, if this be so, the Sirdar should certainly have taken greater care to see the terms of the agreement of 1883 altered to meet the changed requirements of 1886. The omission to do so is, in my opinion, extremely should certainly have taken greater care to see the terms of the agreement of 1883 altered to meet the changed requirements of 1886. The omission to do so is, in my opinion, extremely reprehensible, if nothing worse. If the omission was intentional, the Sirdar's conduct was fraudulent; if accidental, which I cannot believe, the Sirdar was guilty of most culpable negligence and laches.
